It is a pity in a way that Sir Charles Dilke, before writing his letter to the chairman of the Navy League, did not put the question to the First Lord of the Admiralty, to which he received an answer on Tuesday. Mr. Goschen told him that it was quite true, as stated by Mr. Vickers, that the Admiralty had bought a new 12-in. gun, and that the pattern had been approved for some time. Several of these guns are on order, and some have been delivered, and it is anticipated that they will be mounted and tried in the Formidable during the year. With regard also to picric acid, Mr. Powell Williams was able to tell Sir Charles Dilke that with the exception of a small quantity recently ordered to meet present urgent demands all the supplies obtained both for land and sea service have been manufactured in this country. From these replies it would appear that the authorities responsible for naval ordnance and supplies have not been so remiss as was suggested at the Navy League meeting. Seeing also that the Admiralty have decided to largely increase the amount hitherto granted as prizes for good shooting, it would certainly seem that, in this connection at all events, they are better entitled to the confidence of the nation than the state of things as pictured by certain critics appeared to warrant.

From a correspondent at Durban, we learn that on March 7 the distribution of naval guns with the force in South Africa was as follows:—Lord Methuen had two 4.7-in. guns on wheel mountings, and four 12-pounders; General Gatacre had two 4.7-in. guns on wheel mountings; and there were present with General Buller's force one 6-in. wire-wound gun on wheel mountings, two 4.7-in. guns on wheel mountings, one 4.7-in. in a railway truck, three 4.7-in. guns on platform mountings, and sixteen 12-pounders on field carriages. The whole of the mountings for the above guns were designed by Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible.

Mr. Goschen was asked in Parliament on Tuesday last if it was intended to fill the coming vacancy of Storekeeper-General of Naval Ordnance by the transfer of an officer from the War Department or some other source. The First Lord replied that as the appointment would not be vacant for some time the question was premature. We hope, however, that the control and working of this department will eventually be placed entirely with Naval artilleryists, who have solely devoted themselves to the science of gunnery since they attained the rank of Lieutenant, and are undoubtedly preferable to officers of the sister Service for such high professional duties. Rear-Admiral Brand recently remarked that when Army affairs came under revision, after the war was over, it would also be necessary to consider the requirements of the Navy. Then will be the opportunity for placing the Naval Ordnance Department on a proper footing, and selecting a staff of Naval officers to deal with it.

The plea of ignorance set up by the engine-room artificers of the Channel Squadron who recently omitted to salute the Admiral and two of his captains, was not altogether convincing. The incident occurred at Bantry Bay, and resulted in the stoppage of leave of all the artificers in the squadron—a punishment which was fully justified by the fact that the offenders did not have the manliness to come forward and admit their fault. Since then Sir Harry Rawson has very good-naturedly remitted the punishment, being content to warn the engine-room artificers that the offence must not be repeated. There is a possibility, no doubt, that petty officers and men of the engine-room department may find it a little difficult to recognise the captains and officers of other ships, but the failure of any man to acquaint himself with the appearance of the Admiral savours of negligence. Besides this, it is barely possible for any man who happens to be enjoying a day's leave at Berehaven, to fail to identify, in a general way, the officers of his squadron. If in plain clothes, as was the Admiral on the occasion in question, officers still may be known in such a place as Berehaven by the simple fact that they are dressed like English gentlemen. The salute should, therefore, be given as a matter of course, even in doubtful cases, and, as this is understood by the seamen, there is no reason why the engine-room ratings should fail in courtesy to officers. We noticed with regret, though without surprise, that the engine-room artificers lost no time in airing their alleged grievance in the newspapers. Had the Admiral found it necessary to stop the leave of twenty or thirty executive petty officers, we venture to say that less would have been heard of the matter.

The members of the Royal Navy Club 1765-85 dined at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, on the 3rd inst., to commemorate Lord Rodney's action (April, 1782). Rear Admiral C. C. P. Fitzgerald presided, and the guest of the evening was Mr. James R. Thursfield. There were present:—

Admirals E. S. Adeane, C.M.G., Sir Cyprian A. G. Bridge, K.C.B., Reginald N. Custance, C.M.G., Archibald L. Douglas, Sir Walter Hunt-Grubbe, G.C.B., Right Hon. Sir J. D. Hay, Bart., K.C.B., Sir W. R. Kennedy, K.C.B., T. Saumarez, C.B.

Captains G. L. Atkinson, A.D.C., A. H. Anson, T. B. S. Adair, E. E. Bradford, A. Blennerhassett, H. T. Clanchy, W. Collins, R. F. H. Henderson, C.B., A.D.C., Spencer H. Login, G. H. C. MacArthur, R.S. Symonds, H. E. Walters, C. R. Wood, H. Warren.

Commanders Selby Ash, Hon. F. C. B. Addington, J. Murray Aynsley, O. de B. Brock, C. E. E. Carry, G. D. Daintree, Geo. Higgins, A. Hayes-Sadler, M. E. F. Kerr, W. M. Latham, G. H. B. Mundy, W. H. CRONJE'S SURRENDER.

The following extract from an interesting letter by a Naval correspondent with Lord Roberts's force has been kindly supplied to us for publication:—

"Stickfontein Kopjes, March 25:—We have been doing better lately. Last Monday Capt. Probyn, R.A.M.C., who is with the Gordon Highlanders, came to me about 5 p.m. and informed me that there was to be an attack that night on Cronje's laager and that there would in all probability be heavy work for the doctors. I asked him to get me to the front, as of course, the Naval guns would not be in action. At 2 a.m. I took my stretcher bearers down to the river side, and we crept up to our trenches. Then we silently advanced towards the Boer laager in the dark, rested a few minutes, and commenced to entrench ourselves within 50 yds. of the enemy.

"At early daybreak a Boer was just below us washing something in the river, and a pebble could have been dropped on his head from our position. Suddenly the trenches just ahead opened a terrific fire on us. We replied. I was with the Colonials at this time, and as they were losing heavily I had plenty of work to do, and the Gordons not being under so severe a fire, I remained where I was. The Boers presently appeared in some force on our right flank, and completely enveloped us. We had such a warm time of it I thought we should mostly be wiped out, though we took every advantage of what cover we had. Fortunately this state of affairs did not last long, a force of ours on the left bank of the river coming up and driving off the enemy. We were again only subject to the fire from our front, which more than satisfied us.

"A white flag was now hoisted from the trench in front, and a Boer walked in to our lines and had a confab with our leader and then returned, when almost immediately the whole of the enemy's trenches became alive with men standing up without arms, and they had surrendered.

"As soon as all my wounded had been attended to I advanced with my bearers and found numbers of wounded Boers, most of them able to speak English. A Field Cornet, Piet Nielsen by name, came and thanked me profusely for attending to his men, and soon after brought me some hot coffee, for which I was very grateful. Their wounded from previous battles were in a terrible state, in many cases the wounds had not been dressed for five days, and then had only tobacco leaves placed over the entrance and exit. One poor fellow had a bullet from a 4.7-in. shrapnel through his lungs, and mortification had set in, the hectic flush in his face showing that he had but few hours to live; the sights were most painful. The poor animals, hundreds of wounded oxen, horses, donkeys, and sheep, in almost every stage of death, and the ground literally thick with the dead, while the stench was too awful for description. To make matters worse, there were several women and children in the place."

Navy Personal.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has presented to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, through Captain D. N. Welch, a former Commanding Officer of one of the yachts, an autograph portrait of himself in the uniform of Admiral of the Fleet, to be placed in the headquarters of the Institution at Shadwell, London, E.

H.R.H. the Duke of York is now the proud possessor of three sons, the last happy addition having occurred at Sandringham on Saturday last.

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, has suggested to the Right Worshipful the Mayor of that town that the date of the reception of the Powerful's Naval Brigade should not be decided until after the arrival of that cruiser. It was intended to hold it on Easter Monday, but as that is a general holiday much inconvenience might arise in getting the men, when railway traffic is unusually congested and irregular on such occasions, as several of them would obtain leave to visit their friends directly after they arrived at the port, and could not therefore be expected to return almost immediately afterwards. The Mayor has, in consequence, decided to wait until he can personally consult Captain Hon. Hedworth Lambton, and select a day convenient for bringing the men together for this patriotic entertainment.

Admiral Sir James E. Erskine, who relieves Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, in August next, will only retain that appointment until October, 1902, when he becomes Admiral of the Fleet by the compulsory retirement of the Earl of Clanwilliam.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, although he has only formally assumed the port duties, directed the Vivid to proceed to Holyhead, where he hoisted his flag in her, to await the embarkation of Her Majesty on Tuesday last, and had the honour of being presented to the Queen on her arrival at that seaport. No portion of the Irish coast is included in the Plymouth command, as erroneously stated by some of the daily papers.

Admiral Sir N. Bowden-Smith, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, will be relieved at the expiration of eighteen months from the date of his appointment, in July next, that being the usual term allowed a Vice-Admiral if promoted Admiral while his flag is flying at Sheerness.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson and Rear-Admiral A. W. Fanshawe, with their respective staffs, and the Captains of the Channel fleet, were received on Monday last by His Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, prior to the arrival of Her Majesty at Dublin.

Vice-Admiral Sir Compton Domville finally dispersed the Reserve Squadron on Saturday last at Portland after a month's cruise under his command.

Vice-Admiral Sir Compton E. Domville, Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves, completes three years in that appointment on the 11th prox.; Vice-Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, who was Director of Naval Intelligence from 1889 to 1894, is spoken of as his successor, and undoubtedly would be a most admirable selection for that important post.

Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd, late Admiral Superintendent at Malta, who has done excellent service at that establishment during the past three years, becomes a younger Brother of the Trinity House.

Rear-Admiral W. H. Henderson, recently relieved as Commodore at Port Royal, has, with Her Majesty's sanction, been called to the Privy Council of Jamaica, and in addition thereto appointed Member of the Legislative Council of that Government.

Rear-Admiral (retired), Henry M. Miller, has been appointed, by the Lord Lieutenant of Kent, Deputy Lieutenant of that county.

Commodore E. S. Poe, commanding the Training Squadron, was to leave Gibraltar on Thursday last for Madeira and Las Palmas, returning to the former port at the end of the month. Captain R. K. McAlpine, of the Cambrian, on being relieved at St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands, by Captain H. P. Routh, of the Juno, rejoins the Commodore's broad pendant.

Captain W. De V. Hamilton did not relieve Rear-Admiral Lacon Hammett, in command of the General Depot at Portsmouth, until Thursday in last week, the latter officer, although promoted to flag rank in January last, having retained the appointment until the expiration of his successor's leave on full pay.

Captain C. J. Norcock, of the Naval Reserve Department, obtains the Good Service Pension vacant by the promotion of Captain H. J. Grenfell to flag rank. Captain Norcock's services entitle him to the award even if he were not next but one in seniority to the last recipient of that distinction.

Captain F. R. Pelly, of the Psyche, has gone to Bluefields at the request of our Consul, in consequence of British interests being jeopardised by the revolutionary party of that portion of Nicaragua. Captain J. L. Burr, of the Andromeda, while in command of the Intrepid, managed to smooth the troubled waters for a time, but that happened more than a year ago, and the opposition section now considers another outbreak justifiable.

Captain G. A. Gifford paid off the Comus on Saturday last at Devonport, and commissioned the Charybdis with the officers and ship's company of the former vessel. As the Charybdis is fitted for a flag officer, superior accommodation will be afforded Captain Gifford in carrying out his duties as Commodore on the Newfoundland Fisheries Station.

Captain G. H. Cherry, of the Juno, arrived at Algiers on the 29th ult., and the following day embarked the remains of the late Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, Bart., for Gibraltar, where they arrived on Sunday, and have been landed for conveyance to England.

Captain F. E. Brock, of the Highflyer, arrived at Devonport on Sunday last from Gibraltar to refit that cruiser for the relief of the Eclipse flagship in the East Indies.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, reached Mauritius on Monday last, en route for the Far East.

Captain R. W. White, recently appointed to the Galatea, will shortly be transferred to the command of the Rodney.

Commander Claud Hamilton, of the Rosario, left Sheerness on Friday, in last week, for China, to relieve the Rattler. As the latter vessel is to await the arrival of her relief, Lieut.-Commander Hon. G. A. Hardinge will have to make the passage across the Indian Ocean against the monsoon.

Lieutenants A. W. Heneage and R. W. White, Surgeon C. Marsh-Beadnell, Midshipmen George E. Lewin, T. C. Armstrong, and E. G. Chichester, and Major A. G. B. Urmston, R.M.L.I., all of the Powerful, who were left behind when that cruiser sailed from the Cape for England, are coming home in the hired transports, Pindari, German, and Oratava. Everyone, we are sure, will hope that these gallant officers will arrive in time to join their brother officers and comrades at the receptions that are to be accorded the Powerful's Naval Brigade at Portsmouth, and also in London by the Admiralty. Surgeon Marsh-Beadnell was in the action at Modder River, and finding that there was but little, if any chance, of casualties among the men of his Brigade, gallantly offered his services to the Army Medical Officers, who were terribly handicapped with wounded soldiers, and glad to have the valuable aid of their Naval colleague.

Sir Henry Norbury, Medical Director-General, is the historian of the "Naval Brigade in South Africa" during the Zulu War 1877-78-79. He was Staff-Surgeon of the Active, flagship of Commodore Sir Francis Sullivan, and in addition to medical duties with his own men at the front, attended the military forces brigaded with them. Possibly an officer of literary ability will be found to record in book-form the brave deeds of Naval officers and gallant seamen and marines recently employed in the Cape Colony and Natal, as well as those whom Lord Roberts hopes will be with him when our flag is hoisted at Pretoria. It will not be difficult to combine the doings of the respective brigades in one book, and we trust that the attempt will be made of letting the nation know what was done by the Royal Navy and Royal Marines to maintain the integrity of the Empire in one of the hardest campaigns in which the Naval Service has been engaged.

Engineer E. E. Bond (1892) has been promoted Chief Engineer for the valuable services he rendered Major-General Lord Kitchener's Expedition on the Nile, 1898. He was awarded D.S.O., Medjidie 4th class, and noted for promotion. We regret that he has had to wait nearly two years for the latter.

Staff-Paymaster W. Le G. Pullen, Secretary to Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, becomes secretary to Admiral Lord Charles Scott, at Devonport, nearly two years before he expected that desirable appointment. He previously served under Lord Charles Scott in Australia. Paymaster J. A. Keys, of the Curacoa, was secretary's clerk on the latter station with Mr. Pullen, and now takes his place on Lord Charles Beresford's staff. The arrangement is in every way desirable, as Mr. Pullen has had large experience in his junior days at Devonport, and since then he served nine years as secretary to flag officers, while Mr. Keys' training for the secretariat has been with an able master and should meet the requirements of the Rear-Admiral of the Mediterranean fleet.

Staff-Paymaster T. Harrison-Smith continues as Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport until the arrival of his successor. He had only recently settled down in the official residence lately allotted the Port-Admiral's secretary at Mount Wise, and would, but for the lamented death of Sir Henry Fairfax, have remained there nearly two years. It is not probable that such a valuable secretarial officer will remain long unemployed.

Assistant-Paymaster T. H. Millett, late Secretary to Commodore W. H. Henderson at Jamaica, arrived home on Friday in last week by the Royal Mail Steamship Orinoco.

Captain J. A. Tupman, R.M.L.I., has been allowed to proceed to South Africa to join the military forces under Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C.

Lieutenant A. E. Syson, R.M.L.I., embarked in the Sans Pareil on Monday last in place of Lieutenant James Hazel.

Captain W. J. Whiffin and Lieutenant H. C. Morton, R.M.L.I., and Lieutenant J. D. H. Shaw, R.M.A., embarked last week with the detachment of the Royal Marine forces on board the Goliath, commissioned for China.

Baby Foreign.

Several vessels of the French Navy are now undergoing trials with success. At the preliminary trial of the recently completed battleship, St. Louis, it was found that certain small modifications were necessary. The stipulated speed of the ship is eighteen knots, which was attained by her sisters, the Charlemagne and Gaulois. The new battleship in one of her early trials attained satisfactorily, and without special effort, a speed of 17.61 knots, and no doubt is felt that she will prove equal to the others of the same class. She has Belleville boilers, and three vertical engines driving as many screws. The so-called commerce destroyer Châteaurenault has also been under trial with natural draught, and on March 19, with 19,000 horse-power, attained a speed of 22.7 knots, the machinery working very smoothly. It is expected that at the third trial she will easily attain the contract speed of twenty-three knots with 23,000 horse-power. Her boilers are on the Normand-Sigaudy principle, which has given good results in several torpedo-boats and in the destroyers Dunois and Lahire. The trials of the Lahire gave great satisfaction; but she has proceeded to Havre, where certain modifications are to be made at the yard of the Forges et Chantiers de la Méditerranée. At Toulon the submarine boat Gustave Zédé is still under trial, and continually making plunges in the roadstead. All is said to work well, and some confidence is expressed that the boat will prove a success. The Goubet No. 2, which has not yet been accepted by the Government, is also being tried, and a Naval Commission has been appointed to report upon her performance.

Signor Franchetti has presented his report upon the Italian Navy estimates. It was originally intended to lay down four ships of the new type designed by Colonel Cuniberti, which embody many of the features of the battleship with the speed and some of the characteristics of the armoured cruiser. The financial situation of the country makes it impossible at present, however, to put in hand more than two of these ships. These are to be completed by the year 1903, and the cost, including armament will be about 40,000,000 lire for the two of them, bringing up the estimates for construction during the quadrennium, 1899-1903, to 186,000,000 lire in round figures. The ships now in hand, in a state more or less advanced, are the Emanuele Filiberto, Saint Bon, Regina Margherita, Benedetto Brin, Francesco Ferruccio, Garibaldi, and Varesse, with the small cruisers Agordat, Coatit, and Puglia, and ten destroyers and three first-class torpedo boats. Although Signor Franchetti does not consider the new programme at all extravagant, he finds occasion to propose the cutting down of the estimates in certain particulars. A great deal of attention is now being directed by Italian writers and journalists to the necessary increase of the fleet. We have received a pamphlet by Signor Benucci entitled "L'Alleanza Anglo-Italiana," published at Rome, in which the author, recognising the financial difficulties of his country, argues that it would be of mutual advantage to Great Britain and Italy to enter into a kind of offensive and defensive alliance. He thinks that if we retain Egypt we shall need an army, and that the Italian army is the only one available. On the other hand, it would be extremely useful to Italy to be able to depend upon the British Navy, and the writer adds that we might find it an advantage to supplement the resources of Malta by securing the means of sending our ships for repair to Genoa, Spezia, Taranto, or Messina. These are interesting, though rather academic, views.

The Austrian Naval estimates for the year 1900 amount upon the ordinary votes to 25,556,050 crowns (an increase of 3,365,530 crowns) and on the extraordinary charges to 13,910,450 crowns (an increase of 2,417,450 crowns). Among the ordinary votes provision is made for completing the torpedo cruiser Zenta, 2,250 tons, for continuing work upon the Aspern and another torpedo cruiser known as "C," of the same class, though with 100 tons more greater displacement, and for beginning a cruiser "E" of about 7,000 tons to replace the old Radetzky, as well as a small mining vessel. The extraordinary charges include provision for completing six sea-going torpedo boats, for further work upon the Kaiser Karl VI. and the coast defence battleships (8,340 tons) "I" and "II," and for laying down a third ship of the same class. There are votes for the armament of the vessels and for mines, torpedoes, and torpedo nets, as also for work at the coaling and torpedo station at Teodo, the enlargement of the magazines at Vallerunga, and additions to the mining establishment at Fisella, besides sundry other works.

Baron von Maltzahn, Director of the German Naval Academy, has been promoted to Rear-Admiral, and among recent promotions to the rank of Captain we notice the name of Commander Cöerper, Naval Attaché in London.

An individual of curious research in the Rue Royale has discovered that the Naval establishments at Brest are too costly, and that a wasteful policy is pursued in the local administration. He has drawn the attention of the Minister of Marine to the fact, and the result of his inquiry is a singular illustration of the details that lay such a heavy charge upon M. de Lanessan. The Minister has pointed out to the Prefect at Brest that, whereas there are only thirteen Naval cats at Toulon, and only two at Cherbourg in the general magazine, exclusive of a number of animals which are not fed at the public charge, not less than ninety-one animals are in the various victualling and other stores at Brest, a sum of 1,377 francs being annually charged for their supply of cat's meat. The Prefect is accordingly instructed to charge upon the public funds the keep of only one or two cats, and, if more are needed, to find some other means of feeding them.

THE CAPE TRADE ROUTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—On June 24, 1899, THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE published an appreciative leader summarising the arguments advanced in Commercial Intelligence, April 1 and May 20, 1899, concerning our trade routes to the East, and dealing particularly with the proposed transfer in war of our trade via the Suez Canal to what is sometimes called the open ocean route via the Cape. At the conclusion of the leader the Editor remarks that "it follows that if, from the reasons which Lieut. Bellairs assigns, it will be impossible to make this transfer, then we must be prepared to take such steps, Naval or otherwise, as will enable us to maintain the trade through the Canal at all hazards." I think that the present state of affairs at the port of Cape Town fully proves the contention that it will be impossible to make this transfer. The article in Commercial Intelligence gave reasons for calculating that it would require about 12,000,000 tons of shipping to carry on the present trade via the Suez Canal if it is to be forced round the Cape. Using the average tonnage of a Suez Canal steamer, this works out to 100 steamers per week clamouring for coal and accommodation at the port of Cape Town. This tonnage is over and above the seven steamers calling there per week in 1898, the coasting steamers, and any steam tonnage used to replace sailing vessels laid up as the result of war. Apart from all this congestion there is a natural nervousness, caused by the fog of war, about proceeding to sea. Let us, however, instead of recapitulating all the arguments concerning the unsuitability of the Suez Canal tramps for the ocean route, and the comparatively wretched accommodation of that route, remember the saying that an ounce of practice is worth a ton of theory, and see what is happening at the present moment at Cape Town. I hasten to quote the following telegram from the Daily Telegraph correspondent, dated March 12, 1900, Cape Town:—

"The delay in discharging cargo consigned to merchants here from London and other ports owing to the extreme pressure on the docks caused by military necessities, led to a warm debate in the Chamber of Commerce to-day. . . . Some vessels have been lying undischarged since December."

Just imagine a delay of three months coming on top of a month caused by the time occupied in traversing the longer route. Remember, too, that this delay has been caused by a strain on the route owing to military exigencies, which is not one tenth as great as that which would be caused by diverting the Suez Canal trade round the Cape. Under these circumstances, may not those of us who are students in the old-fashioned school which still believes in facing our difficulties instead of running away from them because of some fanciful strategical reasoning ask the pertinent question whether the block on the "open" ocean route is not a barrier which it would take engineering skill many months to remove; while that of "the shipload of bricks" sunk a few feet in the Canal, in spite of the vigilance of our guard, is a mere temporary block which the same engineering skill can remove in a few days? In any case no skill in this world will remove the stain of ignominy clinging to the nation that resorts to the desperate expedient of blocking an international highway neutralised under the most solemn guarantee. The support which the policy of scuttling has met with among leaders of public opinion induced the Chamber of Commerce in 1893 to allow the policy to be urged at a special meeting, which went so far to support it as to allow the arguments of its advocates to pass unchallenged. Writing to Commercial Intelligence, June 10, 1893, Sir John Colomb says that "he can only attribute the tolerance of such a theory to a want of accurate knowledge of the laws and circumstances which govern the conditions of our commercial and shipping transactions over the sea." Yet at that time two of the largest shipowners supported the shifting of the routes as an event which must follow the outbreak of war as a matter of course. Sir John Colomb was kind enough to refer to my arguments as likely "to have a considerable determining influence upon those who glibly talk of 'blocking the Suez Canal' and of 'abandoning the Mediterranean' as the first move on the outbreak of war." I simply followed Sir John's lead in the matter. We are now no longer dependent on theories. We have, through this unfortunate South African War a demonstration on a large scale which ought to carry with it the conviction that the project of shifting the routes is impossible in execution and suicidal to attempt.

CARLYON BELLAIRS.

It is notified that should any publican refuse to serve soldiers in uniform, officers commanding are to furnish an immediate report to the chief staff officer of the District, giving full particulars.

Efforts are to be made to enlist tailors for service in the Army. Having in view the large increase in the Service, men now enlisting stand a good chance of promotion to Sergeant-master-tailor.

The Order of Merit is awarded to eighteen men of the 27th Bombay Infantry for gallantry and devotion displayed in Africa in October, 1898, when guarding the rear of Lieutenant Hannington's detachment against an overwhelming force of the Soudanese.

The Commander-in-Chief has approved the proposal to hold again this year the usual rifle meeting for troops of the Home District. The marching and shooting competitions for the Regulars and Volunteers of the district will, therefore, be held at Bisley on Saturday, May 5.

THE SERVICE RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—As your valuable journal is so widely read by the officers and men of our Imperial Army, which includes the Colonial and Indian forces, I would thank you if you would allow me, to warn them against the attempts of Mr. Baillie-Grohman in the London Press to set them against their excellent Service rifles in favour of German rifles using the clip system, as it produces an immense expenditure of ammunition, though not so great as the detachable magazines of our Service rifles would do if issued to the troops and carried in bandoliers. Mr. Baillie-Grohman goes so far as to head an article in a London magazine "One Cause of our Defeats." He thus seeks to advance his German cause by seeking to make our soldiers dissatisfied with their rifles while struggling against a determined foe, mostly ensconced in trenches with piles of cartridges alongside them. I wish your readers, both officers and soldiers, to understand that Mr. Baillie-Grohman is a civilian, and, as far as I can ascertain, has never been in action. He is, however, ready to dictate to everyone, and insist on this German system. He evidently knows nothing of detachable magazines carried in bandoliers, with which the 10th Hussars made a fine display at Wimbledon some years since, when the Small Arms Committee were deciding on a rifle for the Service. I knew the members of the Committee very well, and saw the German rifles with them. I can say that waste of ammunition weighed much with them, hence Mr. Baillie-Grohman's Germans were set aside, and also the detachable magazines, unless their use should be called in by experience. These detachable magazines hold ten rounds each against the German five, hence they only require one move in loading to the German two moves. The detachable magazine system belongs to the War Office, it can be issued when the authorities please. There are, however, weighty considerations in the matter of ammunition supply to the firing line. Your readers will understand that British troops advance much in the open, while the enemy squat in trenches, the piles of cartridges being carefully prepared alongside each man. Mr. Baillie-Grohman appears to know nothing of this; that our English firing lines should soon fire away all their cartridges is quite beyond his ken. Yet officers returning from the war point out the difficulties of supplying the firing line, in which the men soon expend their 200 rounds.

One great instructor also says "one has heard quite enough of the shooting done during the campaign." Has he? To counteract this great authority allow me to quote from yesterday's Daily Mail:—"The writer in a Boer diary found near Ladysmith notes that we have marksmen of marvellous accuracy," and states that in an attempt to leave cover at a point opposite one of our outposts two men in succession were killed. The writer "had to wait till dusk to get away." I close this letter by saying that I enquired after the Tirah campaign from staff and regimental officers, and they told me they heard no complaints about the rifle which had given much satisfaction. I am now making enquiries from officers, returned wounded, from the front, and they have heard, they assure me, no complaints though in the thick of all Lord Methuen's battles.

EDWARD PALLISER,

Major Canadian Militia, late Captain 7th Hussars.
Army and Navy Club, April 5.

It is officially notified that Militiamen not at the time enrolled in the special service section, or belonging to the Reserve, on embarkation for service abroad or for the Channel Islands, receive a bounty of £1, and, provided they remain abroad or in the Channel Islands for so long a period, will receive a similar bounty on the anniversary of the date of embarkation.

WOUNDED ANIMALS IN WARFARE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—There are some things they do better in America. The reply of our War Office to a request that men might be allowed to be sent out to attend to animals left wounded on battlefields, is an expression of sympathy with the object, but a refusal on the plea that the men would not be under military control, and that, doing such work, they would not be protected by the terms of the Geneva Convention. The reply of the American Military authorities to a similar request is the general order by Nelson A. Miles, Major-General commanding the U.S. Army: "With a view to avoid extreme suffering among wounded horses or mules on the field of battle, it is hereby ordered that a veterinary surgeon, or some other person detailed by the commanding officer, will accompany troops in an engagement, whose duty it will be to put an end to the agonies of horses or mules that in his judgment are suffering to a degree requiring such action on his part." There is a refreshing absence of Red Tapeism, and clear evidence of manly readiness to undertake initiative and personal responsibility, about this action of the commander of the U.S. Army, that is worthy of imitation.

LAURENCE W. PIKE.

THE "ROYAL CANADIANS."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The colonies seem to be only too anxious to be represented in the Imperial service in defending the Empire on the battlefield. During the past few months hundreds of smart young Canadians have been turned away from the recruiting depôts for the contingents recently organised with the answer, "No more wanted." Several applicants have offered to pay their own expenses to Halifax if assured that they would be sent to the front. In view of all this, Canadians are beginning to wonder why all the energy which has been displayed in various ways and forms for the repatriation of the 100th Regiment as the Prince of Wales's "Royal Canadians" has not borne fruit. There can be no question that the people of Canada are in favour of having a purely Canadian regiment in the Imperial service, recruited solely from depôts established in Canadian cities, and officered with graduates from the Royal Military College at Kingston. Surely no better time could arrive than the present to carry out the wishes of the Canadian people in this respect. With the settlement of the South African War hundreds of young Canadians will return here imbued with a military spirit that will undoubtedly make them desire for further service; all that is open for them here is the Canadian Militia, and while many will rejoin their old Militia battalions hundreds would prefer to be serving in a Canadian regiment in the Imperial service. Notwithstanding that a prominent officer here has said that the British soldier's pay would not be a sufficient inducement for Canadians to join the British Army, there is no question that the brave adventurous spirit of the young Canadian would not consider the question of pay when the opportunity of getting travelling experience and the prospect of adventure presented itself, in the shape of service in a purely Canadian regiment in the Imperial Army. Moreover, the British soldier can see considerably more fun for his pay than the men of the Canadian permanent Militia can for theirs. A Canadian regiment in the Imperial service is most desirable and would certainly tend to cement a firmer feeling between this colony and the mother country. Canadians are largely the offsprings of old military stock of two famous fighting nations, the British and French, consequently their qualities for soldiering cannot be doubted. With such a people anxious to serve the Empire, it would certainly seem to be a great mistake if the present circumstances are not taken advantage of, and the desire of the people for the repatriation of their old regiment, the 100th, is not favourably considered and acted upon. Canadians attached to British regiments will undoubtedly fight well for the Empire, but a Canadian regiment in the Imperial service would have a far higher motive to carry their colours to glory, and that would be for the honour and glory of their native land, for Canada in the "British red line." No one in any way connected with military matters in Canada can fail to see the great desire for this change. Hundreds of stalwart young Canadians leave Canada every year for the United States. Many join the United States Army who would certainly prefer to join the Imperial service. Most boys are born soldiers, and all that is required here in Canada is the facilities for enlistment, and a Canadian regiment in the Imperial service would be easily supplied with young men who would be the greatest credit to the Empire. We sincerely hope that those with the necessary influence both at London and at Ottawa will favourably consider this desire of the Canadian people, and at once re-establish the old 100th Regiment as the Prince of Wales's "Royal Canadians," and that the Beaver and the Maple Leaf will become an everlasting factor in the Empire's Imperial service.

CAVALRY BRIGADIERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I was not surprised to see the letter of "Field Officer" on this subject in your last week's issue. It does indeed seem a hardship that whilst nominal Brigadier-Generals were appointed to two of the three Cavalry Brigades with Lord Roberts last October, and scarcely heard of since, another acting-Brigadier (Col. Porter) has actually done all the hard work of the 1st Brigade for six months, but has not even now been gazetted officially, although the 3rd Brigade has not even one of these official paper Brigadiers!

FAIR PLAY.

THE ROYAL RESERVE.

It is announced in an Army Order that the Queen has approved of the formation of four regiments of Cavalry, to be designated respectively "Her Majesty's Reserve Regiment of Dragoon Guards," "Her Majesty's Reserve Regiment of Dragoons," "Her Majesty's Reserve Regiment of Hussars," and "Her Majesty's Reserve Regiment of Lancers." The establishment of each regiment is to be 23 officers, two warrant officers (one, the bandmaster, being attached from one of the regiments in South Africa), 43 sergeants, six trumpeters, and 520 rank and file, inclusive of corporals, shoeing-smiths, saddlers, and saddle-tree makers; total of all ranks, 594. The horse establishment for each regiment is to be 411 for riding and six for draught.

It is also ordered that the establishments for the new Line battalions now being formed and for the Royal Reserve battalions shall be:

Line battalion serving at home: Twenty-four officers, two warrant officers, 39 sergeants, 16 drummers, buglers, &c., 40 corporals, and 760 privates—total, 881.

Royal Reserve battalion: Twenty-eight officers, one warrant officer, 48 sergeants (including transport sergeant and machine gun sergeant), 16 drummers, buglers, &c., 40 corporals, and 873 privates—total, 1,006. The Royal Scottish Reserve battalion will have in addition one sergeant piper and eight pipers.

To each battalion an armoured sergeant will be attached.

What is Lazenby's Sauce?

It is the genuine Harvey's Sauce, an appetising sauce of delicious flavour and peculiar mellowness, the original recipe of which passed about one hundred years ago into the possession of Elizabeth Lazenby. This Sauce is still manufactured by her lineal descendants, and is now known as this distinctive name having been adopted as a protection against worthless imitations.

The Best Field Glass for South Africa.

LIGHT WEIGHT

ARE THE IMPORTANT ITEMS IN SELECTING
A FIELD GLASS FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

AITCHISON'S PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS

ONLY WEIGHS 5 OUNCES, ONLY 1 INCH THICK CLOSED.

The Army and Navy Gazette, Feb. 24th, 1900, says:—"The question of bulk as well as weight should be well considered when selecting a glass for service. Many of the glasses which are now being taken about to South Africa will never be used at all, owing to the nuisance of having a big leather case bumping about on the shoulders. The Patent Pocket Field Glass, however, which Messrs. Aitchison, the opticians, have made, will prove one of the most useful accessories which a scout can possess, as it can be carried readily in the pocket, can be brought into use very quickly owing to the system of rapid focus used, and is at the same time more powerful than many glasses three times its size." As supplied to the Imperial Yeomanry, Lord Loos's Contingent, Honourable Artillery Co. Several thousands are now in use in South Africa.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH" writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £100 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £100 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

Commanders.—J. F. Murray-Aynsley to Argonaut (April 19); C. R. de C. Foot to Thunderer (April 30).

Paymaster.—H. A. Horsey to Curacoa (April 4).

Col. Sir Howard Vincent, M.P., commanding the Queen's Westminster Rifles, has been granted permission by the War Office to increase the establishment of the corps from 12 to 16 companies. The four new companies will be formed at headquarters, and the corps (numbered as the 13th Middlesex) will thus be raised to a two-battalion establishment.

It is announced that:—"The Commander-in-Chief does not consider it desirable to check the enlistment of ex-soldiers who apply to re-enlist. It is, therefore, possible that some may be posted to units in excess of the barrack accommodation available. In another month's time there will be no difficulty in accommodating any such excess under canvas; but until the camping season commences the strain on barrack accommodation will be reduced, as far as possible, by granting furloughs to any soldiers or ex-soldiers who desire it up to May 1; or, in the event of their not desiring furloughs, by billeting them or hiring the necessary accommodation. All ex-soldiers should be clothed before being granted furlough."

THE RESERVE OF OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is apparently a hard and fast rule of the War Office that Reserve Officers, even although employed continuously for long periods with the colours, are absolutely debarred from promotion to a higher rank. They become the junior officer of the rank they hold, or held when they were placed upon the reserve list, and apparently even although repeatedly employed at various intervals, always revert to the bottom of the rank they held when they joined the Reserve. In my own case I left the Service as a Lieutenant within a measurable distance of obtaining my Company, and am now employed as a Line Officer again, but, of course, much junior to my position on the list when I left the Service. Now, Sir, ought not the Service have given count towards promotion to a higher rank, adding it to the previous Army Service? Ought not a Reserve Officer, if considered suitable for employment, also be considered suitable for the rank (at any rate in the junior ranks) of men of the same age as himself? Would not the best plan be to fix an age, say thirty or thirty-five, when a Reserve Officer should be promoted from Lieutenant to Captain, and so on in a scale? I feel sure, judging by myself, that this plan would ensure a much larger number of Reserve Officers. If the addition was made that each officer must be employed in each rank before promotion to a higher one, this would ensure inefficiency. I should like to hear the opinion of other Reserve Officers on the subject.

EX LINESMAN.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

G. S., BELFAST.—Certainly it takes precedence.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL.—We understand that all will be made right shortly.

FUSILIER.—Not prior to July 1, 1881.

PRIZE ESSAY.—We are so informed.

A board of officers, consisting of President, Major-Gen. R. H. Murray, C.B., commanding 1st Brigade; members, Col. Goldie, C.R.E., Lieut.-Col. Hind, D.A.A.G., a field officer R.F.A., a field officer R.A.M.C., and officer A.V.D., the officer in charge of barracks, Aldershot District, assembled at Aldershot on Saturday last to inspect and report upon a suitable site for the erection of huts for the accommodation of eight battalions of infantry and a brigade division R.F.A.

THE ALDERSHOT DISTRICT BEAGLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE." SIR,—We should be very much obliged if you would kindly insert the enclosed letter from the late Captain Berney, 2nd West Yorks Regiment, who was killed at Hussar Hill, South Africa, in action. We have the sanction of his relatives for its publication, and they are very anxious for it.

C. WARD, Lieutenant-Colonel, A.F.D., Hon. Treasurer Aldershot District Foot Beagles. The Warren, South Farnboro'.

P.S.—There has been a fair local response to appeals for funds, but more is still required.

"Spearman's Hollow, Natal, South Africa.

"SIR.—Owing to the present war the Aldershot District Beagles find their regular subscribers all at the front, and are face to face with great financial difficulties, which from what I hear are likely to result in the breaking up of the pack. For over twenty years this pack has given much pleasure to generations of officers in Her Majesty's service, and one or two at least of present Masters of Hounds have learnt their trade with the A.D.B. I therefore venture to appeal from this far-off corner of the Empire to any old follower of the A.D. Beagles, or other brother sportsman, who may wish to save the pack, to send their mite to the hon. treasurer, Aldershot District Beagles.

"Tom H. BERNEY, Captain 2nd West Yorks Regiment, Master A.D. Beagles."

GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,

THE HALT AT BLOEMFONTEIN.

THE prolonged but unavoidable halt at Bloemfontein has had inconvenient consequences. The Boers, taking advantage of the apparent inability of the British commander to push his advance, have detached a part of their forces concentrating at Kronstad, and, adopting the guerilla method of warfare, in which they are adepts, have sent commandoes, lightly equipped, to overrun the whole south-east of the Orange State. This movement is having considerable success for the time being. To it must be attributed our disaster of the 31st ult. at Koorn Spruit, and that at Reddersburg on the 4th inst. Commandoes which suddenly reappeared, as if starting from the ground, attacked the portion of General Brabant's force which is at Wepener, on the Basuto border, on Monday, but were repulsed with loss. The fight was renewed on the following day; but the position being strongly entrenched and well provided with stores, no anxiety was felt for the safety of the defenders, who, Lord Roberts reported on Tuesday, "were holding out bravely." A commando was also posted near Aliwal North, apparently to keep reinforcements from reaching Wepener. There is no cause, doubtless, for disquietude. Lord Roberts holds a commanding central position at Bloemfontein with an army of 50,000 men, his numbers increase daily, and his line of communications is carefully guarded. Nevertheless, the capture of some hundreds of British infantry at Reddersburg, occurring but a few days after the loss of guns, train, and men at Koorn Spruit, gives rise to chastening reflections. These events afford direct evidence of the superior astuteness of the foe, the swiftness of his movements, the completeness of his information, the meagreness of our own, the unreality of the supposed submission of the Free Staters, the general inefficiency of our scouting, and the inadequacy of our arrangements for the support of detachments.

On the morning of the 4th three companies of the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles and two companies of mounted infantry were compelled to surrender after a gallant resistance lasting nearly twenty-four hours, their ammunition having been expended, and no relief being at hand. Returning to Bethany Station from De Wet's Dorp, forty miles east of the railway, where they had been receiving the arms of Burghers, the hollowness of whose submission we are beginning to understand, they found themselves intercepted, and presently surrounded, by a very superior force with guns. They rushed a kopje and held it determinately until all hope of relief had to be abandoned, and surrender became the only alternative to annihilation. Bethany lies on the railway but eight miles to the west of the scene of conflict. It was the base whence the little column would look for support; but at the critical moment none was forthcoming, and the British Army is, in consequence, the poorer by some 500 brave and seasoned combatants. Reinforcements were, it is true, despatched by Lord Roberts's orders at the earliest possible moment, from both Springfontein and Bloemfontein, to Reddersburg and Bethany, but they arrived too late and in insufficient force. On the day following there came a seasonable if a small success, as a sort of solatium, though by no means a compensation for losses so serious in themselves and possibly preventable. Lord Methuen, with a mounted force of the Imperial Yeomanry and the Kimberley Mounted Corps, surrounded and captured, in the neighbourhood of Boshof, a small body of the enemy commanded by the French Colonel de Villebois Mareuil, the able officer whose skill had served the Boers so well on December 15 at Colenso. The commander and seven others were killed, eleven were wounded, and fifty-one made prisoners of war; not one of the little commando, which was composed almost entirely of mercenaries, escaped.

Wednesday, the 11th inst., saw the sixth month of the war run to its close. The present is an appropriate time, therefore, for a brief review of results so far, and of our present position. On October 11 the prospects of Cape Colony and Natal were well-nigh desperate. With less than 20,000 combatants in isolated posts hundreds of miles apart, the British stood at bay, while the enemy in resistless force poured over the borders flushed with visions of early and easy conquest. The stirring incidents and the chequered fortunes of the past six months are too fresh in the memory to need detail here. Natal, the garden colony, was overrun and plundered to within twenty miles of Pietermaritzburg; Cape Colony for months suffered the indignity of invasion; and rebellion was rife over a wide extent of country. For four anxious months, while our strength grew, the balance of advantage inclined to the enemy. The invasion of the Free State on February 11 caused the tide to turn, and during the month that followed our arms were carried steadily—at times almost impetuously—forward. Kimberley and Ladysmith were relieved; the invaders rolled back to the Biggarsberg; General Cronje and 4,000 Boers captured, and the capital of the Orange Republic occupied in force. The cost of these achievements in fighting men, though considerable in itself, has been by no means excessive in proportion to the admirable work done and the difficulties overcome. Viewed relatively to the great object to be secured—namely, the victorious and early termination of the war—the most embarrassing loss sustained has been in horses. General French's brilliant dash to Kimberley round Cronje's flank, and his subsequent rapid operations, culminating in the capture of Bloemfontein, were carried out at such a cost in horses that for a time the mounted portions of Lord Roberts's Army were placed practically hors-de-combat. The loss of efficiency, though serious, was but temporary, and is rapidly disappearing. From the great remount establishment at Stellenbosch, near Cape Town, more than 10,000 English horses have been forwarded to the front, and upwards of 30,000 horses are coming from America, none too many to make good a wastage estimated at some 5,000 a month. If it be true that these valuable animals are packed like bullocks in cattle trucks, and despatched without proper supervision for the journey, a great evil exists that demands immediate remedy, for it is no exaggeration to say that without a very large force of well-mounted horsemen this war cannot be carried to a successful issue. The neglect of the Army Veterinary Department in past years has produced its result, as every Cavalry officer well knew it would. We can only hope, however, that the lesson, costly as it promises to be, will be taken to heart at Headquarters. So far as the strategical situation is concerned the offensive movement of the Boers southwards has broken the British strategical line across the Orange State, the retreat from Thaba N'chu having left its right at Bloemfontein exposed. To the west the line has, on the other hand, been thrown forward by Lord Methuen's advance through Boshof towards Hoopstad. To restore the security of his line in the east Lord Roberts will doubtless when ready take steps to crush or roll back the raiding commandoes, and extend his right as far as Ladybrand.

Since the relief of Ladysmith the Army of Natal has rested, with Colonel Burn-Murdoch's cavalry forming a screen to the north beyond Elands-laagte, and that of Lord Dundonald reconnoitring in the west towards the Drakensbergs. The eastern flank has been covered by Colonel Bethune's mounted column, which on the 8th ult.

advanced from Greytown with the object of seizing Helpmakaar, reported to be unoccupied. The enemy were, however, found there in force with guns and holding a strong position, and Bethune, having no artillery, retired after a sharp engagement. Signs of renewed activity on the part of the enemy in northern Natal are not wanting. On Tuesday a heavy cannonading took place from a position four miles north of Elandslaagte, which the Boers have recently occupied in advance of the Biggarsbergs. The British camp at Sunday's River was shelled, and the right flank threatened during a change of position. The attack was renewed on the following day without success. To afford means of giving an effective reply to this challenge, General Buller had sent forward some 4.7in. and 6in. guns, which eventually silenced the enemy and forced them to retire. The activity of the Boers is due to the continued inaction of the Natal Army, which is guided, doubtless, by the state of affairs in the Orange State. It is there that the stress of the war is now most acutely felt, and a portion of Sir Redvers' force is being diverted, it is supposed, to the western sphere of operations to support Lord Roberts.

The latest news from Mafeking is dated the 30th ult., when all was well. On the 27th occurred the most vigorous bombardment of the siege, and an assault from two quarters was attempted but proved abortive, the enemy not caring to advance to close quarters. The garrison, over-sanguine in their belief of a relieving column coming from the south, looked upon the attack as a final attempt of the enemy to take the place before abandoning the siege. Meanwhile the prospect of relief from the south appears to grow daily more and more remote, and the eyes of the gallant little garrison will possibly before long turn towards Beira as a more hopeful source of succour. Of Colonel Plumer's column we have definite news to the 31st ult., when he was heavily engaged with the Boers near Ramathlabama, six miles only from Mafeking. The place was then actually within sight, but he failed to reach it, being attacked by greatly superior numbers, before whom he was compelled to fall back on his base with heavy loss, being himself among the slightly wounded.

With the reoccupation of Upington on the 5th inst., the western rebellion has apparently been stamped out, and Colonel Parsons has accordingly returned with his column from Kenhardt and Van Wyk's Vlei to Carnarvon. Beira has become a new centre of activity. Troops and stores are daily arriving there from the Cape and the Australian colonies, and Sir F. Carrington is on his way thither to take up his command. The 8th Division, commanded by Sir Leslie Rundle acting under fresh orders, has been diverted from the western line to Springfontein, in consequence of the unsettled condition of affairs on the flanks of the central railway. As the long halt at Bloemfontein draws to a close, no effort is being spared to render the position of Bloemfontein and its line of communications with the south absolutely secure.

Army Notes.

It is announced from South Africa that Lieut.-General Sir William Gatacre has been recalled to England, and that Major-General Sir Herbert Chermiside has been selected to succeed him in his divisional command. It is further stated that Major-General R. Pole-Carew, C.B., has been appointed to the command of the 11th Division, with, of course, the rank of Lieutenant-General; and that Colonel Inigo Jones, who lately left England in command of the 2nd Batn. Scots Guards, succeeds to the command of the Guards Brigade. There has been an almost complete rearrangement of commands in South Africa recently. So far as is known the Brigades and the Divisions are now commanded thus:—

CAVALRY DIVISION.

Lieut.-Gen. J. D. P. French commanding.

- 1ST BRIGADE (Cape):
Col. (Brig.-Gen.) T. C. Porter, 6th Dragoon Gds.
- 1ST BRIGADE (Natal):
Lieut.-Col. (Brig.-Gen.) J. F. Burn-Murdoch, 1st Dragoons.
- 2ND BRIGADE (Cape):
Col. (Brig.-Gen.) R. G. Broadwood, 12th Lancers.
- 2ND BRIGADE (Natal):
Col. (Major-Gen.) J. F. Brocklehurst, M.V.O.
- 3RD BRIGADE (Cape):
Col. (Brig.-Gen.) J. R. P. Gordon, 17th Lancers.
- 3RD BRIGADE (Natal):
Col. (Major-Gen.) Lord Dundonald C.B., M.V.O.
- 4TH BRIGADE (Cape):
Col. (Major-Gen.) J. B. B. Dickson, C.B.

MOUNTED INFANTRY.

Col. (Major-Gen.) I. S. M. Hamilton, C.B., D.S.O., commanding.

- 1ST BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) E. T. H. Hutton, C.B., A.D.C.
- 2ND BRIGADE:
Col. (Brig.-Gen.) C. P. Ridley.

1ST INFANTRY DIVISION (Cape).

Lieut.-Gen. Lord Methuen, K.C.V.O., C.B., commanding.

- 1ST BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) C. W. H. Douglas, A.D.C.
- 20TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) A. H. Paget, Scots Guards.

2ND DIVISION (Natal).

Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Clery, commanding.

- 2ND BRIGADE:
Major-Gen. H. J. T. Hildyard, C.B.
- 4TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Brig.-Gen.) C. D. Cooper, Royal Dublin Fusiliers.

3RD DIVISION (Cape).

Lieut.-Gen. R. Pole-Carew, C.B., commanding.

- 22ND BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) R. E. Allen.
- 23RD BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) W. G. Knox, C.B., R.A.

4TH DIVISION (Natal).

Lieut.-Gen. Hon. N. G. Lyttelton, C.B., commanding.

- 7TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Brig.-Gen.) W. F. Kitchener, West Yorkshire Regiment.
- 8TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) F. Howard, C.B., C.M.G., A.D.C.

5TH DIVISION (Natal).

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Warren, G.C.M.G., R.E., commanding.

- 10TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) J. T. Coke.
- 11TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) A. S. Wynne, C.B.

6TH DIVISION.

Lieut.-Gen. T. Kelly-Kenny, C.B., commanding.

- 12TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) R. A. P. Clements, D.S.O., A.D.C.
- 13TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) A. G. Wavell.

7TH DIVISION (Cape).

Lieut.-Gen. Tucker, C.B., commanding.

- 14TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) J. G. Maxwell, D.S.O.
- 15TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) C. E. Knox.

8TH DIVISION.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Leslie Rundle, K.C.B., R.A., commanding.

- 16TH BRIGADE:
Major-Gen. B. B. D. Campbell, M.V.O.
- 17TH BRIGADE:
Major-Gen. J. E. Boyes.

9TH DIVISION (Cape).

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Henry Colville, commanding.

- 3RD (HIGHLAND) BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) H. A. MacDonald, C.B., A.D.C.
- 19TH BRIGADE:
Col. (Major-Gen.) H. L. Smith-Dorrien, D.S.O., Sherwood Foresters.

10TH DIVISION (Natal).

Command vacant.

- 5TH BRIGADE:
Major-Gen. A. F. Hart, C.B.
- 6TH BRIGADE:
Major-Gen. G. Barton, C.B.

11TH DIVISION (Cape).

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Hunter, K.C.B., commanding.

GUARDS BRIGADE:

Col. (Major-Gen.) I. R. Jones, Scots Guards.

18TH BRIGADE:

Col. (Brig.-Gen.) T. E. Stephenson, Essex Regt.

The soldier of fortune has fared badly in South Africa. Colonel Schiel was taken prisoner at Elands Laagte; Major Albrecht surrendered at Paardeberg; Count Steinberg, to save himself the consequences of capture, imposed on our officers as a military attaché, and is now in Europe; Colonel Villebois de Mareuil, the most distinguished of them all, was one of the killed in Lord Methuen's recent victory. That the Boers have benefited by the latter's services there can be no doubt. He is said to have been the guiding spirit of the forces which faced General Buller on the Tugela, and to have received the thanks of the Executive for his aid at Colenso. Nevertheless, it is possible to over estimate his services. According to his own testimony he had to exercise great tact in giving his criticism and suggestions, for, valuable as they were, coming from a brilliant officer trained in Europe, they were regarded with a certain amount of distrust. In the first place the Boers are suspicious of foreigners; in the second place they understand defensive tactics so thoroughly as to be shy of taking advice except from their own leaders. Hence, Colonel Villebois de Mareuil was not so useful to the enemy as he would like to have been. That he was a gallant soldier, a courteous gentleman, and a patriot there can be no doubt. Soldier of fortune he certainly was; but we, who have given more soldiers of fortune to the world than any other nation, should be the last to judge him harshly. To say that men who take an active part in a quarrel which does not concern them should be severely treated is to condemn some of the bravest soldiers known to fame. General Galiffet, questioned in the Chamber of Deputies on Wednesday, stated that permission would be granted to officers of the French Army to attend the memorial service of the deceased, recognising "that if the Army had been in danger De Villebois Mareuil would have been one of the first to come forward to defend it." It is a decision which every British soldier will approve. Brave men are men to be honoured always, and De Villebois was one of the bravest of the brave.

Many of the disasters and delays in the war, so far, can be traced to neglect of the cavalry and artillery arms. In defiance of modern conditions our Army was organised on the assumption that infantry was to play its old part until the end of time. In this way the training of the cavalry and mounted infantry left much to be desired, as our Generals in the field have discovered to their cost over and over again. One of the mysteries of the defence of Ladysmith was the inability of the cavalry to follow up the enemy, or to aid the relieving columns by sorties. The fact was the horses were not in a condition for active operations on the broken country in the vicinity of the town. According to a correspondent of the Times, they were kept ready for emergencies all day long, than which nothing is more exhausting, and at night, when they should have been resting, they were exercised. If half of them had been saddled and harnessed at one time, the same end would have been attained, with an enormous saving of horseflesh and consequent maintenance of the offensive strength of the garrison. In the west the lack of remounts, which has proved so disastrous to Lord Roberts's plan of campaign, need not have assumed its present proportions had our men given their horses greater care, and our officers not demanded marching impossibilities. In this, as in some other minor respects, we might profitably learn from the Boer, who, having no Remount Department to fall back upon, is as careful to seek cover for his pony as for himself. He rarely rides for more than two and a half hours without a halt. His equipment is as light as he can possibly make it. Our men, though their horses are not so hardy as the Boer pony, persistently ignore these rules. They needlessly expose their horses as well as themselves; they ride long distances without a rest; the weight they often carry is too great; their saddles are sometimes ill-fitting and clumsy, causing galls and sore backs. There is not the slightest doubt that, with common-sense precautions, the mortality among the horses and transport animals in Lord Roberts's advance on Bloemfontein need not have been anything like so serious.

"Who is to blame" is a question that has been frequently asked, when our troops have met with a reverse in South Africa. We venture to suggest, in fairness to all concerned, that it is not so much any individual who is at fault, as our military (so-called) training, which is and has been condemned by all regimental officers for years past. Instead of the main object of instruction being to perfect officers and men in the art of war, it may be said, without any exaggeration, that for every hour's practical soldiering done by any officer, five or six are spent in clerical work or in carrying out various irritating duties of a subordinate character. A man in the present day might be the best regimental officer, but unless he is also a good accountant, can keep a coffee shop or canteen on a sound and profitable basis, and has a knowledge of all sorts of other things, he can never expect to make headway in the Service. Practical musketry, which should be the most important part, at all events of the infantry soldier's training, is quite of secondary consideration, and the total amount of time spent annually by the British soldier in shooting averages about five hours; and consequently as each yearly course commences, he is as great a stranger to the use of his rifle as when he started his recruits' course. Very few soldiers know the value of their rifles or are made to understand that success in battle considerably depends upon each individual's shooting. Our present foes are infinitely better at soldiering than the majority of Englishmen in their self-satisfaction can believe, and it surely is no disgrace that our Army has been temporarily checked by them. Though merely farmers, and without training or discipline, the Boers naturally possess better fighting qualifications than the ordinary private soldier. They have exceptional keenness of sight and hearing, are self-reliant, cool, about the best scouts in the world, and so mobile that only the most perfect reconnoitring has saved our troops from continual surprises. As a nation we owe the Boers a debt of gratitude for so plainly showing the necessity of a thorough reorganisation of our Army and the substitution of a purely military training for the existing one, which may be called a cross between that of a schoolboy, accountant, public lecturer, and general tradesman, with a dash of practical soldiering thrown in now and then.

A well-known German military authority wrote before the war in South Africa commenced:—"The British Army is, taken all round, one of the best manned in the world. Officer for officer and man for man it is unequalled." But it has been given over to faddists, men who have obtained all their experience of war in little expeditions against nigger enemies, and who have consequently never properly been in touch with modern military progress, or appreciated the advance which science has produced on all sides since the days when last English troops fought on European principles in the Crimea. It has been so much the custom for cavalry and artillery to be decied on English soil, that if war with the Boers were to come it would prove a revelation and a blessing to the British War Office." This expression of opinion was prophetic. One only requires to read recent debates in Parliament to recognise how completely even our legislators at St. Stephen's fail to appreciate the strides which the last thirty years have produced in the affairs of armies. However, our eyes are being opened, and when the present war is over there will have to be a complete revisal both of policy and of system.

To run after an enemy who is also a crack shot is a vastly different affair from running after the hounds. This is a lesson the enemy has taught our men several times in our present war in South Africa. It is, however, possible to exaggerate the incapacity of the Englishman to see danger and to exaggerate the value of Boer tactics. Undoubtedly modern weapons of precision will force the soldier of the future to seek cover more than he has hitherto done; but the principle might be carried too far, with a demoralising effect on the courage of our men. After all, the inability of the Englishman to realise danger is one of the secrets of his success, and, however desirable in the abstract caution may be, defiance of it has helped him to build up the greatest Empire the world has ever known. If the born rulers of men this little island has produced had been able to see how utterly inadequate were the resources at their disposal to attain their end we should have neither colonies nor dependencies to add to our strength. India was won by a handful of Englishmen, as, relatively speaking, it is governed by a handful. The same is true of the Canadian North-West, Matabeleland, Nigeria, and Malaysia. Our history glows with the magnificent heroism of single individuals, who, like Sir Stamford Raffles, gained their end simply by walking into the midst of the enemy. However anxious we may be that our men should not risk their lives unnecessarily, it should never be forgotten that the picture has another side.

No one who knows the Yeomanry ever doubted, of course, that the force would do its duty well in South Africa; but it was scarcely supposed by anybody that it would so well uphold the honour of the Service as it did the other day in the action under Lord Methuen. But it only shows once again how contemptible the conduct has been of those at home who have for years spoken slightly, in Parliament and elsewhere, of the force, and suggested its disbandment on the plea that it was an "aristocratic sham." If only an end is put to this form of irresponsible criticism the lives of our gallant yeomen who fall in South Africa will not have been lost in vain. Lord Methuen has spoken of the splendid behaviour of the Imperial Yeomanry before the enemy at Pietfontein, and now those who were on board the Montrose and Winkfield on the occasion of the disaster to the Mexican come in for their share of recognition. Nothing, we are told, could have been better than the thoroughly disciplined manner in which all ranks set to work to assist those in distress. An officer present states that "he was struck by the perfect order which prevailed, and would willingly go into battle any day with men who could so well conduct themselves in circumstances of so trying a character." These are the men who only a few weeks ago ignorant and spiteful critics were referring to as "undisciplined amateurs."

Captain Jessel and Captain Norton, both old cavalry officers, have espoused the cause of the Army Veterinary Staff in the House of Commons, and from the answers given to their inquiries it would appear that Mr. Wyndham is fully alive to the necessity of something being done promptly to increase the popularity of this important service. One of the special correspondents of the Morning Post lately referred to the lamentable condition of things in South Africa owing to the under-officering of the Veterinary Department. By the last mail from the Cape a letter reached us from a cavalry field officer, in which it was said, "I do hope that some friends in Parliament will take up the case of that deserving body of officers—the veterinary surgeons. They have been working like so many niggers here and literary breaking down owing to the strain. Before we left England we, to our great regret, learnt from the lips of Mr. Wyndham that it had been decided to do them the greatest possible injustice. The War Office decision was arrived at in opposition to the views of every cavalry officer of any intelligence, for no sane man could have failed to recognise the mischief which would result and the enormous losses which would be involved. Having myself written to you in protest against the War Office decision at the time, I had hoped that ere this something would have been done to correct the mistake. But apparently there has been no new warrant issued, for the condition of things here now is deplorable. One officer is doing five and six officers' work, and in addition to this is frequently required to teach civilian practitioners their duties in face of a mobile enemy. Meanwhile valuable horses are dying for want of attention, and the mounted arms are left powerless to do anything. We could have no better example of the mismanagement of our military affairs, and Lord Lansdowne ought to find out who his advisers have been in this matter, and be careful that they never are allowed to advise him again, for their incompetence is beyond question." We are sorry to say that our valued correspondent is by no means alone in his condemnation. Every cavalry and artillery officer we hear from writes in the same strain. Captains Jessel and Norton, therefore, are fully justified in heckling the Under-Secretary of State for War; the matter is very pressing, though Pall Mall officials, being ignorant of the management of horses on field service, may not readily recognise the fact.

An account published by the British Medical Journal last Saturday of the work done in a Field Hospital on the Modder River in one week will show at once that the much-abused Army doctor has plenty to occupy his attention once he comes in face of the enemy. In the week ending February 23 the numbers treated in one hospital alone were: Officers fifteen, of whom thirteen were wounded; men 267, of whom 231 were wounded (twelve deaths). Of these, five officers and 136 men were sent to the nearest stationary hospital, others were discharged to duty, and ninety wounded men remained till well enough to proceed also towards the base. As regards the nature of the wounds, the following details are interesting (all were rifle wounds):—

Head, face, and neck	...	Officers 3, men 22*
Chest	...	" 2, " 14
Abdomen	...	" 2, " 13†
Back and spine	...	" —, " 15†
Upper extremities	...	" 5, " 79
Lower	...	" 2, " 88

* 1 fatal. † 6 fatal. ‡ 3 fatal.

Service Club blackballers might do well to note these facts, for maybe some of their own kith and kin are trusting just now to the exertions of these same doctors to heal their wounds and carry them through trying illnesses. We have had such a long spell of peace that many had come to disregard the lessons of a big war. Hence, in a large measure, the disfavour with which the Army doctor has been regarded in the last decade.

The arrangements for the embodiment of those Militia units not yet called up have now been made known, and all corps in this category will assemble on May 1. The war in South Africa is likely to result in many benefits to the Army, but perhaps the greatest of all is to be found in the prominence into which the Militia has been brought. For years past its officers have been protesting, with the best reason, against the systematic neglect of their services. Their appeals to the common sense of those in authority have, however, been as systematically disregarded. But the Service has, nevertheless, more than justified the confidence of those who have appreciated its value. The moment may not have arrived for instituting sweeping changes in our system of defence, but we are delighted to think that in any scheme of Army reform to be submitted by the Government, the claims of the "constitutional force" cannot be set aside. The treatment to which it has been subjected has been in the highest degree reprehensible, and the Service members have made such a determined stand against the continuance of past methods that there is reason to hope for a more enlightened administration of its affairs in the future. Meanwhile, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men will, we feel sure, do their duty as they ever have when the chance has been afforded them of proving their worth. The battalions now embodied are earning the goodwill of all who are brought in touch with them. Colonel Stacpole, the Embarkation Officer at Southampton, has reported in the highest possible terms on those which have been shipped to South Africa; and from Aldershot and other stations we hear nothing but good of the officers and men called up for garrison duty. As one General Officer in command writes to us in a private letter: "I cannot speak too highly of the Militia, of all ranks. It is a service which could be made anything of if only it were encouraged, and it is astonishing that so valuable a force should have been for years so shamefully neglected. But for the admirable spirit which pervades its commissioned ranks the result might have been disastrous, but I am pleased to say that the foundation of soldierly enthusiasm is so eminently solid and sound that under proper management a reserve can be provided, the value of which it would be impossible to overrate." Once again we say to our good friends of the Militia, Be of good cheer, the days of mismanagement are fast nearing their end.

The Reserve Battalion idea is almost a bigger farce than it was expected it would turn out to be, if we may judge from the present condition of these new units. In many districts the men have responded to the call splendidly, which was not, perhaps, to be wondered at in all the circumstances. But battalions are sadly deficient in officers, in some cases only three or four being posted, and these Field officers. Of arms and accoutrements there are none forthcoming. Thus the men are left more or less to their own devices, and it is not unnatural, perhaps, that canteens and local publicans are driving a roaring trade. It does not, however, say much for the administrative ability of those who conceived the idea of raising these battalions, when the slightest modicum of forethought would have prevented the reckless waste of public money, and have produced an arrangement by which the services of the men could have been made available for military duty from the day of joining at less than half the expense. One would almost imagine that the scheme had been framed by some enemies of the War Office with the object of bringing that department into discredit.

The foreign military papers continue to discuss the military situation with more or less knowledge of the circumstances. The Militar-Wochenblatt now gives a very impartial account of what happened. It tells its readers that after the occupation of Bloemfontein a very great work lay before Lord Roberts in settling the country and preparing for other operations, and that thus delay was necessarily imposed. It refers also to the difficulty of operating across the veldt and to the complex question of the supply of horses. Our contemporary is convinced that the Boers will fight hard, knowing that they are fighting for existence, and it draws attention to some of our dangers and difficulties, including the very great length of the line of communications, remarking incidentally that Sir Redvers Buller and Lord Methuen in regard to their communications were long in a very critical situation.

In the Revue du Cercle Militaire, which is the only French military paper we are acquainted with that has maintained an impartial attitude, there is an article by Lieut.-Colonel Focard upon the defensive and offensive. He begins by saying that it is much too early to come to any definite conclusions concerning the military events in South Africa. He remarks of our officers that they belong to the upper classes, and bring to their daily duties an activity and a tenacity which are special to the British people, with personal bravery which cannot be too highly praised. He expresses the opinion that the bold, strategic offensive adopted by the Boers has failed because of want of co-ordination between the Transvaal and Free State forces. To General White great praise is given for having used every possible effort to retard the offensive movements of the enemy. He asks why the Boers made no attempt to throw a great force into Cape Colony, and there foment a general rising. Like the writer in the Militar-Wochenblatt, he believes that the war will be long, difficult, and arduous. The veldt, he adds, is inhospitable, and the line of communications grows longer, while time is terribly destructive for the invader. The same, he thinks, would not apply in European war, because the States of Europe could not long support the arrest of economic life which an invasion would cause. Colonel Focard's most interesting point is that the events do not discredit the tactical offensive prepared and conducted as it should be. He bases his argument upon the fact that our losses, if spread over the whole force engaged, have not been severe, and that we have always, by dint of energy, captured the enemy's position and occupied it. Wherever the attack has been well managed, success has been attained, and this applies not only to sudden rushes, but to attacks of some duration. Therefore, says Colonel Focard, the tactical offensive has certainly not spoken its last word. Another point made is that war can be learnt, and that a school is necessary in which it can be taught. There must be a permanent body of officers to study it for the training of generations to come, in order that in the hour of battle these may know how to be victorious.

The France Militaire has an article entitled "Malheur au Vaincu," which may be read in one sense as a defence of Sir Redvers Buller. Our contemporary remarks that, though Lord Roberts assumed the supreme command in South Africa, Sir Redvers Buller remained at the head of his troops in Natal, and pursued his task with a stubbornness which no check could weaken. The General's reverses were many, and the France Militaire believes that however many victories he may yet secure he will remain "le grand vaincu de cette guerre nefaste." "Sir Redvers Buller has made mistakes; but if abroad no one has looked kindly upon his fate, if his operations have been severely criticised, and those of his adversaries applauded, it has not been on account of supposed faults of generalship—which cannot easily even now be rightly appreciated—but because he is a British citizen, the General in command of the Army of an egotistical and rapacious people. This is why the tactics of the British generals have been judged with such severity." It is interesting to discover that the criticisms, at least of the French military journals, are not those of military critics but of violent and unreasonable Anglophobes.

Out of the remains of the two Field Batteries, 14th and 66th, nearly destroyed at Colenso, when Sir R. Buller first attempted, on December 15, to cross the river Tugela, it is satisfactory to find that the 66th Field Battery has been reformed, brought to the front again, and took part in the action on February 20, when General Hart crossed the Tugela and occupied Colenso. At the beginning of February, Captain C. Cunliffe Owen, R.F.A., was appointed to organise, equip, and command this 66th Field Battery. The men were made up from forty of the former 66th Field Battery, twenty of the 14th Field Battery, and others belonging to batteries in Ladysmith. Horses were obtained from remounts, some English, some Walers, and others Colonial. They had to be shod and branded, all to be broken to saddle, and most to harness, but with the help of two subalterns, Lieutenants Howell and Grylls, these things were successfully carried out in a short time. The equipment (in pieces), 15-pr. guns, carriages without spade attachment, waggons, ammunition, &c., came packed from India. The harness, no holes punched, came packed; and fitting it on to raw horses must have been a difficult job with only one collar-maker, but in this matter the Ordnance gave most useful assistance. Before moving to the front the battery, which was very short of non-commissioned officers, had been supplied fortunately with a full complement of officers. Besides Captain C. Cunliffe Owen, since promoted to Major, commanding, there were Captain R. M. Johnson, Lieutenants Hawkes, Grylls, and Howell, with Lieutenant Hannay, attached. Lieutenants Hawkes and Grylls belonged to the former 66th Field Battery, and were with it in the Colenso disaster. The officers and men must have worked very hard to get the battery into working order in about three weeks, the sultry weather, with blazing sun and a plague of flies, being most trying, as they have been to our troops in most of the recent operations.

A correspondence has been going on in the columns of the Times on the withdrawal of the 1st Batn. Highland Light Infantry from the Highland Brigade at the Cape. It seems to be imagined by some that a slur has been cast on the old 71st, a regiment which is justly proud of its history. The explanation, however, is easy enough to find. It was desired to render the Highland Brigade essentially Highland, i.e., to make it up of battalions wearing the kilt. The Highland Light Infantry stand far too high in the estimation of all soldiers, and especially those from North of the Tweed, for them to suppose for a moment that it will have felt slighted. On the contrary, there is, we venture to say, not an officer, non-commissioned officer, or man of the Brigade under Major-General Hector Macdonald who will not have parted company with that distinguished regiment with feelings of deep regret.

The fifty commissions placed at the disposal of Lord Roberts are to be given, it appears, to all classes of troops under his lordship's command irrespective of rank or corps. In addition Lord Roberts has been asked to nominate a few deserving non-commissioned officers for promotion for good service. These will be exclusive of any who may hereafter be recommended for distinguished service in the field. And, further, a total of eighteen non-commissioned officers who were noted as candidates for promotion have recently been selected for commissions and will be gazetted as they are reported medically fit.

In spite of apparently serious news from Ashanti, we are assured officially that there is no cause for alarm. The isolation of the Governor and his wife at Kumassi is the result of trouble among the natives themselves, not of united action against ourselves. Fortunately since the death of Prempeh they have had no recognised leader, so that a rising may be readily put down. The incident is a familiar one in our tropical dependencies, the inhabitants of which seldom realise the blessings of good government all at once. Under the savage tyrants who ruled them previous to British occupation, inter-tribal war was impossible; mistaking the character of our administration, they may imagine that such is not the case now. That there will be any organised rebellion is most unlikely; the work done by the expedition of a few years ago was too thoroughly done. The Haussas will, no doubt, be quite equal to the occasion, or they will fall below their own standard in Nigeria, where they beat back overwhelming masses of their co-religionists in magnificent style. If, as the Times correspondent says, the natives cut the telegraph wires to provide themselves with bracelets, the incident loses much of its significance, so that the discipline of the Haussas should soon be the means of establishing order in the colony.

The French have been watching with a good deal of care the operations of our armoured trains in South Africa, and they believe they have effected a great improvement. The factories at Indret have sent to Cherbourg a rolling fortress, which, according to one paper, is likely to become celebrated. Instead of being rectangular and separate, the trucks of this armoured train are cylindrical, and are fitted into one another at the ends. The engine has a conical form, and when the whole train is put together its length is 148ft., the general form resembling that of a fish, or rather of an enormous steel cigar mounted on wheels. It is completed at each end by a point, and the speed attainable will approach fifty miles an hour. The Moniteur de la Flotte, which gives these particulars, does not describe the armament, nor give any details concerning the engine.

The statement of Mr. Wyndham that already steps are being taken to secure designs for a war medal may be accepted as evidence that the War Office recognises the necessity of being prepared. It is early yet, perhaps, to talk of the issue of a medal for the war for South Africa; but when, in the fulness of time, measures may have to be adopted to recognise the gallantry of our troops, it is only right that no delay should occur in striking the decoration which the sons of the Empire have so fairly earned. In these matters the graciousness of the acknowledgment is considerably detracted from if years elapse between the promulgation of the Army Order and the issue of the medal. The War Office, it is gratifying to know, is for once showing itself sensible of its duty to the Army.

A large increase has taken place in the commissioned ranks of the Volunteer force. Between January 1 and March 31 last there were 930 appointments, against 128 resignations. This is as it ought to be. The present is no time for young men physically fit to hold aloof from military service.

Regulations are about to be issued sanctioning exchanges between captains in the British Service and the Indian Staff Corps. Meanwhile applications from officers can be sent to Army Headquarters in India for disposal.

Army Personal.

The French authorities in Algeria displayed the greatest courtesy and good feeling towards the British Army on the intelligence reaching them of the death of Sir Donald Stewart. Sir Donald died at the English Club. There were therefore two distinct ceremonies. First, when the remains were removed from the club to the English Church; second, when the Juno embarked the remains for "Gib." At the first the general commanding at Algiers turned out with a brilliant staff and about 3,000 troops of all arms—cavalry, artillery, Zouaves, line and marines. The coffin was laid on a gun carriage decorated with palm branches and the French and British flags. Numbers of the French officers attended the service, and each regiment marched past the coffin in conclusion at the salute. On the occasion of the second ceremony the church was surrounded by French troops. Through their midst marched the bluejackets from the Juno and a company of British Marines. Then the gun carriage with the coffin was handed over to the British, and again escorted by the French troops, was drawn through the city to the Admiralty pier, and carried by a launch on board the Juno. Ordinary business was at a standstill throughout the afternoon in the city. Mr. Buchanan asked the First Lord of the Treasury, on Monday, whether Her Majesty's Government had thanked the French Government for the respect paid by the military authorities in Algeria to the memory of the late Field-Marshal. Mr. Balfour replied in the affirmative. The cordial thanks of Her Majesty's Government had, he said, already been conveyed to the French Government. He was not, however, aware that any offer was made for the conveyance of the body in a ship of the French Navy. The remains were removed by H.M.S. Juno, first-class cruiser, to Gibraltar, and had since been placed on H.M.S. Rameses for conveyance to England. On the receipt of the news of Sir D. Stewart's death steps were at once taken to accord a military funeral befitting his rank, after ascertaining the wishes of his family with regard to his interment. We learn that Lady Stewart and her daughter only just arrived in time to see the last of the deceased Field Marshal. He only lived about twelve hours after they reached his bedside, but he was conscious and knew them, and was so pleased. One of the first things he asked his wife was, "How is George?" and she could not think what he meant, and turning to the nurse she said, "Perhaps you understand him better than I, what is it he is asking?" It turned out that he was perfectly conscious, and wanted the latest news of his friend Sir George White, for whom he had the greatest admiration. The funeral service will take place to-day (Saturday) in the chapel of Chelsea Hospital, and will follow generally the lines of the ceremony observed at the funeral of his predecessor, Sir Patrick Grant. The service will be held at 12 o'clock, and the remains will be interred at Brompton Cemetery.

Lieut.-General Sir George White will arrive at Southampton this morning, and will be received by the Mayor and Corporation, in State. Sir George has telegraphed home accepting the offer of the freedom of the Clothworkers' Company, which will be presented to him at a banquet at the Company's Hall, in Mincing Lane, on a date hereafter to be named.

Lieut.-General B. L. Foster, R.A., will be placed on the retired list on the 30th inst. on completing five years of non-employment.

Lieut.-General A. Nugent, who has been Colonel of the 7th Dragoon Guards since April 30, 1892, succeeds the late General Clarke as Colonel of his old regiment, the Royal Scots Greys; and is himself succeeded by Major-General Sir Henry Ewart, K.C.B.

The correspondent of the Daily News, who was taken prisoner by the Boers in the neighbourhood of Stormberg, and was ultimately released, writing from that place on March 13, pays a high tribute to Sir William Gatacre. He says:—

"The enemy fell back from Stormberg cowed by the British General's tactics. Had they remained there another twenty-four hours Gatacre would have had them in a ring of iron, but the Boer General is no fool. He saw his danger, and like a wise man, he dodged it. Gatacre's generalship was simply superb. Let the idiotic band of critics who sit in safety in England howl to their hearts' content; Gatacre deserves well of his country. Had he dashed recklessly into this hornet's nest he would have sacrificed four-fifths of his gallant officers and a host of his men. Had I to write his military epitaph to-day I should say that 'he won with brains what most generals would have won with blood.'"

Major-General H. M'Calmont, C.B., commanding the Cork District, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward. General M'Calmont entered the Army June 23, 1865, and served for five years in the 9th Lancers, and afterwards in the 7th Hussars and 4th Dragoon Guards. He has held several Staff appointments, and has taken part in seven campaigns. During the Red River Expedition of 1870 he was employed to carry despatches from Fort Garry to the Government. He took part in the Ashanti War of 1873, and the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78, as British Military Attaché at the headquarters of the Turkish Army in Armenia. He was present at the Siege of Kars (Turkish War medal and Brevet-Majority). He also was in South Africa in 1879, during the operations against Sekukuni (mentioned in despatches, and promoted Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel). He was again mentioned in despatches for his services in the Afghan War, 1879-80. He was twice mentioned in despatches for the Egyptian Expedition, 1882 (medal with clasp, the Khedive's star, and 3rd Class of the Medjidie). During the Nile Expedition of 1884-85 he commanded the Light Camel Corps (mentioned in despatches, C.B., promoted Brevet-Colonel).

Lord Basil Blackwood, who has been appointed Deputy-Judge-Advocate-General in South Africa, is the third son of the Marquis of Dufferin, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple less than three years ago. It will be his duty, as Deputy-Judge-Advocate-General, to advise the military authorities on questions of law and procedure arising out of courts-martial. The position is a most responsible one, for obviously the interests of the Empire may be affected by the character of the advice which Lord Basil Blackwood gives.

Colonel R. K. Parke, half-pay, lately commanding the 3rd Dragoon Guards, is en route to South Africa in the Union-Castle steamship Galeka, in command of his battalion of Imperial Yeomanry.

Colonel Ian Hamilton, C.B., having arrived at Bloemfontein from Ladysmith, has been appointed to a new command. It has been decided to reorganise the Mounted Infantry and form them into a division of two brigades. Of this division Colonel Hamilton takes supreme command, with Colonel E. T. H. Hutton, C.B., and Colonel C. P. Ridley in charge of brigades. There will be four corps in each brigade. The first corps will be commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Alderson; the second by Captain De Lisle; the third by Lieut.-Colonel Pilcher; the fourth by Lieut.-Colonel Henry; the fifth by Lieut.-Colonel Dawson, Indian Staff Corps; the sixth by Major Legge, 20th Hussars; the seventh by Captain Bainbridge, East Kent Regiment; the eighth by Major Ross, Durham Light Infantry. This organisation will include the whole of the Mounted Infantry, both Regulars and Volunteers, a command of about 10,000.

It was Colonel the Hon. G. M. Talbot, R.E., Director of Military Intelligence, who arrived at Massowah on the 3rd inst., and not Major-General the Hon. R. Talbot, C.B., commanding the Army of occupation, as the telegram from Cairo stated last week.

Colonel D. A. Blest, half-pay, late 2nd Batn. Essex Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the 87th Regimental District, Armagh, vice Colonel W. Wood transferred to Warley, with effect from Monday next.

Colonel J. H. S. Craigie, late Highland Light Infantry, A.A.G. Army Headquarters, Simla, has been selected to officiate as a 2nd Class District Commander, and is posted to Sind District, vice Brigadier-General H. S. Brownrigg, retired.

Colonel F. H. Plowden, 2nd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, has been appointed A.A.G., Headquarters Bengal, vice Lieut.-Colonel R. M. Greenfield, late Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, transferred to Army Headquarters in a similar capacity, in succession to Colonel J. H. S. Craigie.

Lieut.-Colonel M. C. Barton, D.S.O., R.E., has succeeded Colonel H. P. Leach, C.B., in command of the Bengal Sappers and Miners.

Lieut.-Colonel E. J. A. Balfour, commanding the London Scottish Rifle Volunteers, has been granted an extension for four years, dating from the 28th inst. Colonel Balfour's retirement would be a distinct loss, not alone to the London Scottish, but the whole Volunteer Service, the best interests of which it has been his constant aim to promote, and that on most progressive lines.

Major J. G. Fair, 21st Lancers, is to retain his appointment as Adjutant of the Cavalry Depot, Canterbury, on promotion.

Major R. H. Murdoch, on his retirement from the Royal Artillery after continuous service of nearly forty-four years, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £300 a year. Major Murdoch joined the Royal Artillery as gunner and driver during the Crimean War, served in Bengal as Sergeant-Major 1858-60, and was commissioned as Quartermaster in 1873; was appointed Superintendent of Records in 1873, promoted Captain in 1879, Major in 1887, and retired in 1899. He was Secretary of the War Office Committee on Army Records and Army Pay Accounts, and is author of several treatises on military history and archaeology. His many friends will rejoice at this recognition of long and meritorious services.

Major L. G. Drummond, 1st Batn. Scots Guards, who vacated the Military Secretaryship to Lord Minto in order to accompany the first Canadian contingent to South Africa, is on his way back to Ottawa from the Cape, having been selected to succeed Colonel Hutton in command of the Dominion Militia.

Captain R. J. G. Elkington, R.A., on vacating his appointment as A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Nicholson, at Mhow, has taken up the duties of D.A.A.G., R.A., Bengal, vice Captain H. H. Butler, vacated.

Captain the Hon. M. Ward, R.A., is appointed A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Lord William Seymour, commanding the troops at Halifax, N.S.

Captains C. H. Armitage, 3rd Batn. South Wales Borderers, and P. H. Leggett, 5th Batn. Worcestershire Regiment, Assistant Inspectors Gold Coast Constabulary, are stated by Renter's correspondent to have been wounded in the disturbance at Kumasi. Captain Armitage has been acting as private secretary to the Governor, Sir F. Hodgson.

Captain W. E. K. Money, 2nd Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry, has been appointed Governor of the military prison at Colchester.

Captain T. A. Harrison, I.S.C., has been appointed an Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, vice Major H. F. S. Ramsden, vacated.

The troops taking part in the Russian army manoeuvres this year will consist of 150 battalions of infantry, seventy squadrons of cavalry, with a brigade of Cossacks in addition, and 348 guns. The manoeuvres will be held in the Moscow and Minsk military districts. They will consist first of all in the rapid massing of the troops at the most important points, with the object later of crossing the Dnieper in the supposed presence of the enemy, and of defending the railway line from Smolensk to Briansk. The Russian General Staff also intends to reproduce some of the operations which have taken place in the war in South Africa, and in this reproduction the field telegraph, the telephone, the war balloon, pigeon post, and wireless telegraphy will be brought into play and experimented with.

The Belgique Militaire states that the commission formed two years ago at Brasschaet to examine the various types of field gun submitted to it as suitable for adoption by the Belgian artillery has at last decided on a 3in. gun constructed by a Belgian firm, the Société John Cockerill, on the system of Nordenfelf of Paris. The breech is closed by a concentric screw, the carriage is rigid, having neither hydraulic brake nor a spade at the end of the trail, though there is a brake on the wheels. The total weight of the gun, including carriage and limber and forty rounds of ammunition, is 1½ ton. The weight of the projectile is 14 lb., and the muzzle velocity 1,716ft. per second.

It is announced that the new French 12-pounder quick-firing field batteries are to be of four guns only. The matter has been a great deal under discussion lately, and French gunners have been divided into two camps in the discussion. The Armée Territoriale, which gives this information, has been at pains to learn the considerations which have moved the Superior Council of War, after a year's hesitation, to express an opinion favourable to this reorganisation. It appears that the change is to be made upon the evidence of the reports of the battery commanders who, since the adoption of the quick-firing guns, have been engaged in training the troops. They say that, in view of the increased rapidity of fire, it is impossible for them properly to control and direct the fire of more than four guns. All details concerning the new arm are regarded as confidential, but a further reason for reducing the number of guns in a battery has relation to the question of ammunition supply. A principal argument adopted by those who favoured the change has been that the increased rapidity of fire has rendered a four-gun battery equal to one of six guns of the old pattern, and that it is better to increase the number of batteries by diminishing the establishment of guns hitherto assigned to them. On the other hand, those who have opposed the change have based themselves upon the contention that the increased efficacy of guns is no reason for reducing the quality of a battery, and that it would be far better to take measures to obtain the fullest effect from a six-gun quick-firing battery.

A board of officers, under the presidency of Lieut.-Col. A. C. Chesney, has been so engaged at Salisbury Plain, inspecting and reporting on suitable sites for hutments for eight infantry battalions and three brigade divisions R.F.A.

WAR SUMMARY.

Sunday, April 8.

The Times correspondent telegraphed from Bloemfontein:—

"Major-Gen. Pretzman has succeeded in establishing excellent order in the town. Indeed, Bloemfontein presents the appearance of an ordinary town, except for the presence of a great number of soldiers, whose behaviour is above reproach. The military authorities have issued stringent orders forbidding civilians to be out after eight in the evening. Lord Roberts addressed a temperance meeting the other day, at which he stated that he was proud to command the best behaved Army in the world. And his lordship's statement was no exaggeration."

Writing from Bloemfontein to-day a correspondent said:—

"Remounts for the Cavalry are anxiously awaited. The scheme for the construction of divisions of three brigades has been abandoned. The 18th Brigade has been finally disavowed from the 6th Division, and Gen. Clements's Brigade replaces it. Gen. Clements's Brigade arrived at the camp early this morning after a fifteen days' march through an almost deserted country. The men stood the long journey well."

Monday, April 9.

Wepener, in the Free State, near the Basutoland border, garrisoned by a force—some 2,000 men—of Gen. Brabant's Colonial Division, was attacked by the Boers to-day. There was hard fighting all day. The Boer force consisted of three commandoes with artillery.

News reached London from Mafeking dated March 26. All was going well there at that time. On the night of the 23rd the enemy abandoned their fortified position on the Brickfields, which was then occupied and dismantled by the garrison. The result was to free the town from rifle fire. On the 26th two guns emplaced near the abandoned works opened fire on the main line of the Boer trenches, silencing the enemy's siege gun. The garrison had learned of the occupation of Bloemfontein, and was stated to be "in high spirits."

Tuesday, April 10.

The enemy opened fire during the morning with five guns on Sir Redvers Buller's camp, situated south of Sunday's River. An artillery duel ensued, in which we lost four killed and eight wounded. Musketry fire was exchanged, but the whole affair partook of the character of a reconnaissance by the Boer General.

The Special Correspondent of the Times thus describes the affair:—

"Though it was reported by Kaffirs on the previous evening that an attack was intended, only the usual precautions were taken, and the first shell came as a complete surprise. The Durham Light Infantry, who were drilling in front of the camp, were shelled, and one man was wounded. The first few shells fell among the 2nd Division, one passing through the West Yorkshire Regiment's mess tent while the officers were at breakfast. The fire was then concentrated on the Naval camp. The Naval guns were still lashed behind the waggons, the usual method of transport, and took some time to get into action. Some opened from the Naval camp, while the rest were being dragged to the emplacements previously built. In half an hour all the Naval guns were in action and the enemy's fire was checked. Firing remained brisk for about two hours, during which half a battalion of the West Yorkshires advanced to a kopje close to the river west of the Dundee road, where they came under a heavy shell and Maxim-Vickers fire. They were also subjected to musketry fire and were lucky in having only three casualties. About midday it appeared as if the enemy were about to envelop us. On the east they came round till they were in touch with our Mounted Infantry patrolling on the other side of the river immediately in front of the railway bridge. However, they retired after exchanging a few shots. On the west the Boers were seen, having crossed the river, to be making for Jononos Kop. The South African Light Horse and Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry were sent out and came in contact with them. Our 5in. guns shelled them from near Elandslaagte Station, and Sir C. Warren also advanced his infantry to the lower slopes of Jononos Kop. In the evening the Boers were seen trekking towards the north-west with their waggons. Kaffirs came in later reporting that the enemy were retiring, but their guns were still on the hills."

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Bloemfontein that the garrison at Wepener was holding out bravely, and had inflicted severe losses on the enemy yesterday. Our casualties on that occasion were eleven killed (including Major Springer, Cape Mounted Rifles) and 41 wounded.

It was stated that the Rhodesian Force, under Sir Frederick Carrington, will detrain at Marrandelles, on the Mashonaland Railway, and thence proceed south-west to Victoria, towards the Transvaal frontier.

A proclamation issued by Lord Roberts warning the inhabitants of the northern districts of Cape Colony that, if further acts of hostility are reported, the offenders will be treated with the utmost rigour of Martial Law.

Lieut.-General Sir Herbert Chermiside left Bloemfontein with his staff to relieve Lieut.-General Sir William Gatacre in command of 3rd Division.

Wednesday, April 11.

Details come to hand from Col. Plumer's column which was actively engaged on the 31st ult., six miles from Mafeking. Col. Plumer was obliged to fall back to prevent himself from being outflanked, and lost in the operation three officers and seven men killed, and three officers and 24 men wounded, besides 11 "missing." Col. Plumer was slightly wounded in the right arm. He retired to Ramathlabama, thence towards Gaberones.

News came from Wepener. The enemy stated to have lost heavily in the recent fighting. Yesterday one of their big guns was knocked over. Lord Kitchener paid a visit to Aliwal North during the afternoon and inspected the positions across Frere Bridge, in company with Gen. Brabant and his staff. He sent a sympathetic message to the Wepener garrison, hoping for an early change in their circumstances. He left Aliwal North during the evening.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Hunter arrived at Durban to-day from Ladysmith with a large number of troops, including the Somersetshire Light Infantry, Connaught Rangers, and Royal Dublin Fusiliers. They embarked on board transports, their destination being unknown.

Thursday, April 12.

Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle and staff said to have reached Springfontein.

A revised official statement of casualties reported since the beginning of the war, up to and including the 7th inst., shows these results:—

Officers killed	211
Officers died of wounds	48
Officers died of disease	47
Officers died of accidents	3
Non-commissioned Officers and Men killed	1,960
Non-commissioned Officers and Men died of wounds	465
Non-commissioned Officers and Men died of disease	1,485
Non-commissioned Officers and Men died of accidents	34
Total deaths	4,253
Officers wounded	627
Non-commissioned Officers and Men wounded	9,863
Total wounded	10,510
Officers missing and prisoners	168
Non-commissioned Officers and Men missing and prisoners	3,722
Grand total	18,653

To these, however, must be added 29 officers and 1,828 men who have been invalided home sick (as distinct from wounded). The proportion of deaths from disease again shows a marked increase. It amounts to a fraction over 36 per cent. this week, as against 33.8 last week. The proportion of deaths from wounds has also gone up slightly, being now 5.1 per cent. of the total injured.

Friday, April 13.

According to latest intelligence Col. Dalgely's force was still maintaining its position at Wepener. Cannonading recommenced on Thursday morning, but was not very heavy. It is stated that the enemy have two or three fresh guns in position.

The Times correspondent wrote last night:—"Our troops are carefully husbanding their ammunition, and our guns are making excellent practice. The Boers are believed to be short of ammunition. A strong patrol returning last night from the direction of Smithfield met only a few small groups of the enemy."

It is proposed that officers who served in India under the late Lieut.-General Sir Penn Symons, K.C.B., should join in placing in the Umballa church a brass to his memory. Subscriptions, limited to 5 rupees, will be received in India by the Punjab Banking Company, Meeran Meer branch, for the "Symons Memorial Fund," and in England by Messrs. Henry S. King and Co., at 45 Pall Mall, London, S.W., the English subscriptions being fixed at 5s.

Obituary.

NAVY.

Capt. Peter Astle Scott, for 25 years Nautical Adviser to the Dominion of Canada, has died at Balham at the age of 84. He entered the Service in February, 1829, passed his examination in 1835, and from 1839 until promoted to the rank of Lieutenant on his return to England in October, 1843, was employed under Capt. Francis Rawdon M. Crozier as mate in the Terror on her voyage to the Antarctic Ocean for purposes of magnetic research and geographical discovery. Capt. Crozier recommissioned the Terror in March, 1845, and, in company with the Erebus, departed under the command of Sir John Franklin to make a fresh attempt to explore the North-West passage through Lancaster Sound and Behring Strait. Fortunately for himself, the deceased Capt. Scott did not accompany his old vessel, which, it will be remembered, never returned, being subsequently appointed to the Columbia, steam surveying vessel, serving on the coast of North America.

ARMY.

Gen. John William Sidney Smith, Colonel of the South Staffordshire Regiment, died at his residence, Thirlmere, Leamington, on the 11th inst., aged 86. Joining the 38th Regiment as Ensign, Feb. 3, 1832, he became Lieutenant, Aug. 4, 1837; Captain Aug. 29, 1844; was appointed to the command of a dépôt battalion, May 1, 1856; was promoted Colonel, Sept. 2, 1858; Major-General, March 6, 1868; Lieutenant-General, Oct. 1, 1877; General, July 1, 1881; was appointed Colonel of the Gloucestershire Regiment Jan. 20, 1883, and transferred to the South Staffordshire Regiment Jan. 26, 1897. He commanded a detachment of the 38th Regiment in co-operation with a Naval expedition, under Captain Loch, in the ascent in boats of the river St. Juan de Nicaragua, in 1848, including the assault and capture of the port of Serapiquí, and the surrender of the forts of Castello Viljo and St. Carlos. He also accompanied Captain Loch to the town of Grenada, and was present at the deliberations and conclusions of a peace treaty with the Nicaraguan Commissioners. Served in the Eastern Campaign 1854-55, including the Battles of Alma and Inkerman, Siege of Sebastopol, capture and occupation of the Cemetery and Suburbs on June 18, and was Senior Officer of the 38th at the close of the war. (Medal with three clasps, Knight of the Legion of Honour, Fourth Class of the Medjidie, Turkish Medal, and C.B.)

Lieut.-Gen. Henry Wray, C.M.G., Major-General retired list, R.E., died at Bournemouth on the 6th inst., of pneumonia. Born Jan. 1, 1826, he joined the Army Dec. 20, 1843; became Captain, Feb. 17, 1854; Major, Nov. 18, 1864; Lieutenant-Colonel, July 6, 1867; Colonel, July 6, 1872; Major-General, April 26, 1882; and retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General, Nov. 5, 1887. He was sent on special service to Japan in December, 1863, as commanding R.E. under the Naval Commander-in-Chief, Vice-Admiral Sir Augustus Kuper. Was sent by him in August, 1864, to reconnoitre the batteries at Simonsaki Straits, and was afterwards present with a detachment of Royal Engineers in the action of Sept. 5, 1864, and subsequent operations (mentioned in despatches, Brevet of Major).

Col. William Raymond Llewellyn, Lieutenant-Colonel, retired list, Royal Artillery, died at 27, Lowndes Street, S.W., on the 9th inst., aged 66. He joined the Army April 11, 1854; became Captain May 4, 1860; Major, July 5, 1872; Lieutenant-Colonel, July 1, 1880; retired with the honorary rank of Colonel, July 1, 1884. He served in the Abyssinian Expedition 1867-68 (medal).

Lieut.-Col. William Thurlow Baker, Major, retired list, late Indian Staff Corps, died at Mecorah, Iowa, U.S.A., on the 24th ult., aged 75. Previous to his retirement in May, 1866, he commanded the 4th Goorkhas.

Lieut.-Col. John Alexander Scott, retired list, Royal Army Medical Corps, died suddenly at Nahun Sirmur, State Punjab, on the 4th inst. He joined the Army Oct. 11, 1859, and retired Aug. 20, 1890. He served in the New Zealand War 1861-62, and in the South African War 1881.

Major William Morrison Bell, formerly of the 3rd Hussars, of Thor, Birrington, Isle of Thanet, died at his residence at Banchurch, Isle of Wight, on the 6th inst., aged 65. After obtaining his Majority in the 3rd Hussars, Oct. 18, 1864, he retired from the Army by sale of his commission.

Major Charles Campbell Hook, formerly of the 7th Madras Cavalry, and afterwards Adjutant 2nd Batn. Perthshire R.V., died at Great Heath, Coventry, on the 4th inst., aged 78 years.

Major C. F. Sprenger, Cape Mounted Riflemen, was killed in the fighting round Wepener on the 9th inst. His first war service was in the operations against Langalibalele in 1873. He also took part in the Galek and Gaika campaigns in 1877-78, and in the operations against Moiroso in 1879. At the capture of Moiroso's stronghold he led the storming party, and was promoted Captain for distinguished service. Major Sprenger subsequently served in the operations in Basutoland in 1880-81.

Capt. Ferdinand George Casson, 2nd Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers, was killed in action in the engagement near Reddersburg, on the 4th inst. Born March 5, 1864, he joined the Northumberland Fusiliers as Lieutenant, August 29, 1885, and became Captain Oct. 17, 1894.

Capt. William Thorburn, late of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, has died at Dawson City, Klondyke, according to a telegram just received. He was a son of the late William Thorburn, 12, Buckingham Terrace, Edinburgh, and of Mrs. Thorburn, now of 20, Murray Park, St. Andrews; was 34 years of age; joined the Army August 23, 1884; became Captain August 23, 1893; and retired two years ago.

THE LATE SIR W. LOCKHART.

Lord Curzon, at the meeting of the Indian Legislative Council, on the 21st ult., referred to the death of General Sir William Lockhart. He said:—

"Before we proceed to the business of the sitting I must say a few words concerning the sorrowful fatality which has robbed us, since our last meeting, of one of our most distinguished members of this Council, the late Commander-in-Chief. Sir William Lockhart had only been for less than a year and a half a member of this body. So far as I remember, he never once spoke here, and I daresay, had his life been spared to the full limit of his term of office, he would never have spoken. He did not care for speech-making. He was essentially a man of action, whose character had ripened and whose reputation had been won on the battlefield and in the camp. It was among the wild tribes of the frontier, and amid the soldiers of the army whom he loved and led to so many victories, that the gift of leadership which he combined with a singular gentleness of disposition was best seen and was most widely known. By force of this ascendancy he rose to the great position of Commander-in-Chief of the Army in India, an office which he filled not merely by titular appointment, but in an equal degree by popular acclaim. He has not lived to continue to the Army in his exalted station the services which he had already rendered to it in so many campaigns. In the prime of life and in the plenitude of his powers, an inscrutable destiny has struck him down. But he leaves a record of combined gallantry and judgment in the field, and of the power of inspiration over his followers which are among attributes of great commanders, and which entitle him to a high place in the illustrious roll of Indian captains. It may be permitted to myself, who had known him for many years, long before a happy fortune made me his colleague in the Government of India, to add that, by his premature death, we have lost not only a brave officer and gifted general, but a chivalrous and noble-minded gentleman and a most lovable man."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—As several times lately and in the obituary service notices in your paper the grant of a year's service is included in rewards given to those who served with Lord Clyde at the relief and capture of Lucknow in November, 1857, and March, 1858, I beg to state that this very unique distinction was conferred only on the old garrison of Lucknow, 1857, which defended the Residency for 87 days until the arrival of Outram and Havelock's column, Sept. 25, commonly called the 1st Relief of Lucknow. This force having continued the defence of the Residency until Lord Clyde's Relief, was also granted the distinction of a year's special service. ONE WHO KNOWS.

5th Dragoon Guards.—Major Hoare and Capt. Kennard have arrived home from Natal, invalided. Lieut. the Hon. R. L. Pomeroy left Cape Town for England on the 5th inst. in the Austral.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers).—The regiment took part in all the operations round Colesberg up to Feb. 3, when it left Rensburg and proceeded to Naauwpoort, and thence sailed to Orange River. On Feb. 9 it marched with Col. Hannay's column, via Rameh and Ramdam, to De Key's Drift, and then to Klip Drift. It there joined the 1st Cavalry Brigade and took part in the engagement at Klip Drift on the morning of Feb. 15, and in the subsequent relief of Kimberley on the same evening. Two squadrons formed the advance guard on that occasion, and they were the first to come into contact with the parties sent out by the defenders. Subsequently the advance guard went on that night to the suburbs of Kimberley, and Col. Kekewich, the commander of the defence, came out and conversed with the officers. The regiment took part in the affair of Dronfield next day, and on Feb. 17 two squadrons under Major Sprot joined Broadwood's Brigade in his march to Koodoosrand Drift to head back Cronje and his army, and confine him in his laager at Paardeburg. In the operations round Paardeburg, culminating in Cronje's surrender on Majuba Day, the regiment also took part. On the 6th the regiment started on the march towards Bloemfontein, and was present at the actions of Poplar Grove and Abraham's Kraal on the 7th and 10th; and on March 12 it helped to seize the kopjes outside Bloemfontein, which surrendered on the morning of the 13th.

An influential county meeting, convened by Col. the Hon. O. W. Craven, commanding the Berkshire Yeomanry, was held at Reading last week to consider the best means of carrying out the instructions contained in the recent Army Order on the training of Yeomanry for this year. Col. Craven, in his circular, expressed his anxiety to increase materially the strength of the regiment and render it worthy of the county. He was supported at the meeting by most of the officers, the Mayor of Reading, and others. After discussion a committee was formed to assist the commanding officer in carrying out the object of the meeting.

Reviews.

THE EGYPTIAN CAMPAIGNS.

Some years ago Mr. Charles Royle, late R.N., and now a judge of the Egyptian Court of Appeal, published a volume upon events in Egypt up to the death of Gordon and the withdrawal of our forces to the north. That book has now reappeared under the title of The Egyptian Campaigns (Hurst and Blackett), and, by a certain amount of judicious compression, it has been found possible to continue the narrative up to the death of the Khalifa. The book is therefore one of great utility, because it records events from our first operations in 1882 and includes a narrative of the rise and fall of the Arabist and Mahdist movements, as well as of the incidents of our intervention. Mr. Royle is one of those who see Egypt growing up from youth to the manhood which will enable it to control its own destiny. In other words, although he recognises that it would be little short of criminal for us to leave our work half achieved, he foresees a time when he believes that it will be wise and expedient to leave Egypt to itself. This is a matter upon which there may legitimately be two opinions, and our place in Egypt, in the view of many, is ruled by larger conditions than those which are concerned with the internal development of the country. Up to 1885 there had been many errors in our policy. Our intervention to suppress the rising of Arabi had been dilatory, and when the Mahdi rose as a new danger we reduced the Army of Occupation, and left Egypt single-handed to cope with the revolt. The events which surrounded the death of Gordon are still fresh in the public mind, and it must suffice to say of Mr. Royle's book that it gives us a sufficient narrative of all the events up to that time. The latter part of his book is an excellent compilation from authoritative sources, and his narrative is well balanced and well written. Indeed, we do not know where anything so good can be found dealing with the whole course of these important events. Mr. Royle defends Lord Kitchener from the charges made against him and pays a high tribute to the orderly administration of the country which has been provided for. He believes that, under the improved conditions, the Sudan will yet become a prosperous dependency of Egypt.

NAPOLEON'S MOTHER.

To most readers, and certainly to most English people, Letitia Bonaparte is a somewhat shadowy picture. She has a very small place in the life of her son, and even in the great work of Thiers but a single page is devoted to her. Yet she was a remarkable woman and well deserved a special biography. Napoleon's Mother, by Clara Tschudi, is one of a series of volumes dealing with the great women of the Napoleonic age, and has been translated from the Norwegian by E. M. Cope (Swan, Sonnenschein and Co.). The book was received in Norway as entertaining, instructive, and edifying, and in its English dress it well deserves that description. Napoleon himself said that to his mother, and to her good principles, he owed his fortune and everything that was good that he possessed, and Letitia's own character is marked by her saying that to fall is nothing if the end is noble, but to fall is everything if the end is crime. Letitia loved her children and watched them grow up with a mother's pride. It cannot be said that she was surprised by the rise of Napoleon, though, like many others, she had misgivings when he assumed the Imperial purple; and, when she found herself the mother of an emperor, three kings, a queen, and two reigning princesses, she used to complain that she had not the companionship of any one of them. She greatly disliked official ceremony, and it did not please Napoleon that she remained so long away from the Court. The slowness with which she made her preparations to start for Italy showed how slight was her wish to occupy the place assigned on the right hand of her son. Her official position had been settled with a great deal of difficulty, and, though Joseph and his family called her "Impératrice Mère," Napoleon himself always addressed her as "Madame," while the people knew her as "Madame Mère." Thus Letitia came little into public view during the Empire, but she was active in unostentatious charity, though always very careful about expenditure, and was commonly regarded as mean. After the fall of the Empire and in exile she showed great stability of character, and lived long persecuted and regretful. Towards the end of her life she was as a recluse, and died in 1836. The book which Madame Tschudi has written should have many readers. She does not always take the view that we are familiar with in England, but she has a fresh and open mind, and has presented to us her subject with a good deal of force and originality. The translation has been well done, and the work is acceptable, entertaining, and informing.

THE BRITISH SOLDIER.

Mr. Thomas Atkins is a volume by the Rev. E. J. Hardy, M.A., Chaplain to the Forces (T. Fisher Unwin), devoted to the life and character of the British soldier. It is certainly extremely interesting and contains a vast amount of information concerning military service and life. Mr. Hardy, of course, knows his subject well, and he is a picturesque and attractive writer, with a great fondness for "the lad in red." His chapters are devoted to such subjects as recruiting, the inside of barrack-rooms, "barrack-room babble," nicknames in the Army, marks of distinctions, manoeuvres, recreation workshops, regimental sports, hospitals, religion in the Army, gentlemen rankers, home and foreign service, &c. One interesting chapter is devoted to the special honours indicated in the dress of soldiers, such as the custom in the Somersetshire Light Infantry of the Sergeants wearing their sashes in the same way as the officers, because, when all the officers were killed at Culloden, the Sergeants took their places, and the curious distinction of a badge on the back of helmet in the Gloucester Regiment, because at Alexandria they were attacked at the same time both in front and rear. Mr. Hardy gives a very pleasing picture of the soldier, and tells us that our troops set out for the present war as if they were going to a picnic. He has keen sympathy with them, and fills one chapter with extracts from their letters. We heartily commend his book, and hope it will have a great sale, the more so because he tells us that the profits are to be given to help soldiers disabled and the families of those who are killed.

SHORT NOTICES.

The third volume of Mr. Fitchett's How England saved Europe, devoted to the war in the Peninsula (Smith, Elder, and Co.), is admirable. Our readers are well aware that he is a bright and vigorous writer, who knows how to tell a story picturesquely and attractively. His history is good and his narrative most reliable. The history of the great war, 1793-1815, could not be conveyed to young people in any better fashion than in Mr. Fitchett's volumes.

We have received the 11th edition of Elements of Modern Tactics, by Lieut.-Col. W. J. Shaw, M.A., and the 14th edition of Military Law: Its Procedure and Practice, by Lieut.-Col. Sisson C. Pratt, late R.A., both in the series of "Military Handbooks," originally edited by Gen. Brackenbury (Kegan Paul, and Co.). These are well known volumes which have attained a great success, and we are very glad to welcome them in their present form, which is the old one with some emendations, and they are thoroughly brought up to date, and include particulars of the many changes which have been introduced since they last appeared.

Shooting for Sport and War, by W. W. Greener (R. A. Everett and Co.), is a little volume enforcing the great importance of marksmanship to the nation, and full of hints and practical instruction for the beginner. Volunteer riflemen, not less than those who handle the rifle for sport, will find the book very full of interest.

Kelly's Handbook to the Titled, Landed and Official Classes (Kelly's Directories, Ltd.), is the 26th annual edition of a most useful book. All its particulars are contained in one alphabetical arrangement, and though they are sometimes brief, they are generally sufficient. We have found the book extremely useful and nearly always accurate. The particulars are brought down to a recent date. Much useful information concerning the Royal Family, the Houses of Parliament, Foreign Ministers and Consuls in London, British Ministers abroad, and other such matters are included.

OFFICERS' DAUGHTERS.

The annual general meeting of the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army was held at the Royal United Service Institution on Saturday last. Lord Wolseley had promised to preside, but was prevented from doing so at the last moment. In his absence, Lord Stanhope occupied the chair, and among those present were the Duke and Duchess of Somerset, Lord Chelmsford, Gen. Sir J. J. H. and Lady Gordon, Maj.-Gen. Blake, &c.

The Committee's annual report stated that the financial state of the school was not so satisfactory as could be wished, the expenditure exceeding the income by £337. Thanks were due to the Commander-in-Chief for £150 from the profits of the Military Tournament Fund. As the struggle in South Africa roused the country's sympathy for soldiers on active service, the Committee called the attention of friends of the school to the fact that additional funds would enable them to offer increased help to officers' families suffering through the war. Army and marine officers with small incomes may have their daughters admitted to the school at £15 a year to receive a first-rate education combined with personal comforts. On Jan. 1, 1899, there were 115 pupils on the books, and in January, 1900, the number was 121.

The report was adopted, and the vacancies on the governing bodies were filled.

THE NAVY.

LORD HOPE TOUN'S presidential address to the Naval Architects was, as usual, very interesting, and an able summary of recent ship-building the world over. In the construction of merchant ships the United Kingdom has beaten its own records, the total output for the past year reaching the enormous figures of 1,416,791 tons, representing an increase of 49,000 tons. This activity is not stated to have affected warship construction, a matter with which the President dealt at some length and with natural gravity. Accepting the explanations of Mr. Goschen, Lord Hopetoun considers that some steps must be taken by the Admiralty to accelerate the building of ships of war. Two courses, he said, were open to the Government: Either to extend, by means of orders guaranteed over a series of years, the number of firms capable of supplying armour plates, or, failing this, for the State to undertake its own manufacture. This conclusion has been reached for some time past by all competent critics, and has been expressed by the Navy League. In effect, there is no present need for the Government to embark upon the commercial experiment of manufacturing armour, such an experiment being fraught with all manner of difficulties of a most serious character. The wiser policy must be to stimulate the natural productive sources of the kingdom, which can readily be accomplished by guaranteeing more extensive orders to the manufacturers. This policy ought to have been set in motion at least five years ago, but it is not too late to overcome the delays that have been, at least in part, caused by lack of provision at the Admiralty. Mr. Goschen is an able First Lord in many directions, and there has been none abler for many years, but his impenetrable optimism cannot suffice to protect our battleships from foreign shot and shell.

We are glad to note also that Lord Hopetoun alluded to the failure of the Admiralty to take active steps to remove all superfluous woodwork from our fighting ships. Notwithstanding the lessons of the Spanish-American War, we have been slow to remove inflammable woodwork from our ships. To take precautions in the cases of new ships still building will by no means suffice, for there is scarcely a vessel in the Channel or Mediterranean squadrons that is fit to go into action, owing to the amount of woodwork with which she is hampered. The only excuse for the delay is that we cannot afford to lay up our ships wholesale whilst the required alterations in internal structure are effected. One by one, however, the ships could and should be taken in hand. It is quite true, as Lord Hopetoun said, that we should remember that our vessels have to keep the sea longer than those of other nations, and that therefore health and habitability must receive great consideration. But after all, these are secondary to the essential matter of efficiency for war, and although, as we have more than once pointed out, the conditions in our Navy and in those of the navies of China and Spain are dissimilar, yet no precautions should be omitted which may render our ships and their fittings less inflammable.

The maritime world will look forward with great interest to the conference of naval architects and engineers which is to be held in Paris during the coming Exhibition. Owing to that assembly, there will be no summer meeting of our naval architects in England. In referring to this matter we do not see that the President at the Institution of Naval Architects made any reference to an important statement which Commander Beehler, of the United States Navy, made at the first annual meeting of the sister society at Berlin, a statement which appeared to call for some notice. He is reported as saying that in his opinion the German department of Naval Construction is now superior to the Naval schools in Great Britain and France, and that he had advised the United States Government to send their young Naval constructors there, rather than to the schools in this country or in Paris. The subject is one that might well be discussed at the forthcoming Conference.

THE JAPANESE NAVY.

THE paper which was read by Rear-Admiral FitzGerald before the Society of Naval Architects upon the Japanese Navy drew new attention to a very important political fact, for, as he said, the rise and development of that Navy was probably without precedent in the world's history. As all who follow Naval movements are aware, a number of battleships, armoured cruisers, and torpedo destroyers have been built and are building in this country, while several other vessels are in hand abroad. When the torpedo depot ship of the Vulcan class, certain torpedo-boats, and a few third class cruisers have been built, the whole of the ship-building programme will have been completed, and Japan will be possessed of a fleet certainly without a rival in Eastern waters. The marvellous power of assimilating new ideas entirely foreign to their national traditions which has been exhibited by the Japanese has attracted the attention of the world, but only those, as Admiral FitzGerald said, who have seen the ships in commission and visited the dockyards in working hours can fully realise the significance of the wonderful strides the Japanese have made since they set to work to create and maintain a modern navy. Their zeal, their earnestness, their close attention to small but essential details, as well as their power to grasp broad principles, must be seen, as the Admiral says, to be appreciated.

Although the most important Japanese ships have been built abroad they have large dockyards of their own which are being developed. Of these, the best known is Yokosuka, which was established in 1866, French officers being employed until 1875 to train the Japanese workmen and to supervise the operations conducted. British officers have also been asked to undertake and organise the systematic training of the Japanese personnel, and Admirals Sir Richard Tracey, Wilson, Douglas, and Ingles are among those whose talents are reflected in the present state of the Japanese Navy. Up to the present time the limit of size at Yokosuka has been about 5,000 tons, but the dockyard is to be enlarged to build cruisers of the largest class, and eventually battleships also. In regard to construction at home, however, Japan at present labours under the disadvantage of having to purchase all materials, even for cruisers, from abroad, and it is therefore as yet more economical to order large ships to be built in foreign yards. The other dockyards in Japan are Kure on the inland sea, and Sasebo, both of them easily defensible, and the first of them capable of being made impregnable against attacks from the sea. A fourth dockyard on the north-west coast of the main island is also in course of construction at Maitsuru.

The Japanese Navy is certainly a dominant factor in the politics of the Far East, and even the possession of Port Arthur and the development of the Russian squadron in the Pacific do not give Russia anything like equal strength. Fortunately the trend of international politics brings Japan to our side, and the British and Japanese together in the Far East would be equal to any combination. The friendly feeling that exists between the two countries is illustrated in many ways, and not least in the readiness of Japan to place her largest shipbuilding orders in the hands of British builders. We shall, therefore, regard with gratification the great review of Japanese ships which is to take place before the Emperor during the present month. It is intended more for mobilisation purposes than as a mere display, and it is interesting to know, and not without significance either, that the entire naval force of the country will be in commission, and will engage in manoeuvres. Perhaps this demonstration in force is not without relation to the rumour that it is the intention of Russia to lay hands upon a port in Korea.

Navy Notes.

The reception of the Powerful at Portsmouth on Wednesday was all that might have been expected on such an occasion. The preparations were most complete, although it was officially announced that, so far as the officers and crew were concerned, it was not intended to give the affair other than a private character. The shore was lined with sightseers, and all the fortifications with troops, who cheered the ship as she passed up to the harbour. There the men-of-war were dressed and manned, and the Blue-jackets and Marines vied with their comrades of the Land Service in the welcome to the gallant defenders of Ladysmith and the heroes who fought at Graspan. The public reception takes place at Portsmouth on the 24th, and it can scarcely be doubted that it will be followed by a similar function in London. The Blue-jackets and Marines who have distinguished themselves in South Africa, and won the admiration of the English-speaking world by their exhibition of the same adaptability and resourcefulness which their forefathers exhibited, deserve all the welcome that the country can give them. We shall miss, it is true, some of those who have added lustre to the record of the Navy, notably Captain Scott of the Terrible, to whose ingenuity it was largely owing that Captain Lambton was able to play such an important part in the defence of Ladysmith. But if the public cannot extend their congratulations to all the members of the Naval Service who have done such good work in South Africa, they can at least show their appreciation of these achievements and gallant deeds by their greeting to the representatives who have returned.

Sir John Colomb's lecture at the Royal Colonial Institute on "British Defence" deserves more detailed consideration and thoughtful attention at the hands of the public than it has yet received. Such a paper is most timely just now, and as regards his audience the lecturer could not have wished for better fortune, but in a matter such as this it is more than desirable that the people should be reached and interested. How little real confidence is felt in certain influential quarters in the ability of the Fleet to perform its duty is manifested by the very general demand for the further provision of land forces to defend this island at the present crisis. We were all proud of the composure exhibited by the country at the time of the Fashoda business, but it would now seem that it was due to something more than confidence in the Navy. When therefore there is so much evidence of a determination on the part of the nation that the question of Imperial defence shall be settled, not in any mere parochial spirit, but with the co-operation of the colonists who have given us such a splendid demonstration of their loyalty and military aptitudes, it will be a matter for the deepest regret if the practical expression of the people's wishes should be based on incorrect principles. There can be no question that, as Mr. Chamberlain said the other night in the House of Commons, and as Mr. Barton said again on Tuesday, we must proceed very cautiously in matters of this kind, and it is as well to wait before deciding on any system of common action for the colonists to make the first advances. On the other hand, the more suggestions and the more discussion the better. Faith in the virtue of an all-powerful Navy is very strong in the colonies if somewhat weak at home, and Sir John Colomb would have us take advantage of this. As he pointed out, it could not be too often repeated that we did not owe to Trafalgar, in 1805, that long maritime peace which was the conspicuous characteristic of the last century; but we owed it to the fact of our immediately following up that victory with a special and enormous increase of expenditure on the fleet, and increasing it progressively through long years until competition by other maritime Powers became hopeless.

It is for the mother country and the colonies alike, said Sir John Colomb, to mark the grim features of modern wars, and that they had become progressively bolder and more sinister. Roughly sketched, they were, in their maritime aspects: Wholesale wastage of ships of the inferior power, more than retail wastage of men by the superior force; certainty of the destruction of the weaker fleet; irrevocable nature of defeat; and quickness with which all was over. He considers that the teachings of modern experience present a programme of cardinal requirements somewhat as follows:—(1) Immediate arrangements for the gradual devolution and redistribution of manufacturing and sustaining power in respect of ships, appliances, and armaments of war, so that a "world"-State should not be so wholly dependent as it is now on a single island for the production and supply of all things necessary for Imperial security in war. (2) The maintenance and the distribution of reserves of ships, naval and military armaments, supplies, and warlike stores, in each district of the world regulated by circumstances relating to our position in war and that of foreign Powers. What the war has taught us is that, granted the perfect safety of the sea, the time in which a given military force can be thrown on any shore from over-sea is not so much a question of sea distance as of the number and variety of the ports of collection, embarkation, and the wharfage and shipping arrangement of such ports.

We must therefore be careful not to base arrangements for British defence on too ready assumptions that foreign Powers could make formidable and sudden military descent on our coasts at home or abroad. The money spent and the force allocated to purely military defence must be regulated by reasonable possibilities, not by vague fears or by exaggerating dangers. All departmental rules differentiating between rank, status, and place of colonial forces and their units from those of the United Kingdom respectively, must be swept away. For the rest, the following main principles suggested themselves as those which must prevail and rule if British military power was to be really promptly available for the general defence of the Empire in war:—(1) The Regular Army and its Reserves must be the nucleus of the Imperial Army. (2) The Imperial Army for the great defensive wars should consist of the Army and its Reserves, augmented by such portion of home and colonial territorial forces as volunteered, and prepared in peace to hold themselves available for general service in war. (3) The acceptance of a binding obligation between the Governments of all parts of the Empire to secure similarity in armament, warlike stores, and all things really essential to such uniformity as was necessary to secure that when the Imperial Reserves furnished by territorial forces, by different parts of the Empire, were brought together in the field, complication and confusion should be avoided.

The sad accident which occurred at Brighton on Tuesday afternoon, and by which several of the men of the torpedo boat destroyer Desperate lost their lives, seems to have been one of those accidents of the sea which no amount of forethought and precaution can entirely prevent. It appears that four destroyers of the Chatham Division anchored off Brighton on Tuesday morning, and towards the afternoon a boat was launched from each vessel. Two of them reached the shore in safety, but owing to the rough sea another was blown towards the West Pier and upset, its occupants being thrown into the sea. The intention was to land at the head of the West Pier, the flotilla being anchored about half a mile eastward. The accident had no sooner happened than assistance was forthcoming. A boat at once left the pier, two more left the destroyers, and the Brighton lifeboat was promptly launched. The result of these efforts at rescue was that all the men were picked up except two, but unfortunately four of them, all of whom are said to belong to the Desperate, were drowned before help could reach them. A fifth body was washed ashore later in the day, the clothing on the body being marked R. E. Wells. The names of the four men drowned are believed to be G. Smith, C. P. Fennar, J. Stewart, and W. Hailstone. One man was rescued by the Brighton lifeboat in an insensible condition, three were picked up by the pier boat, while another man swam ashore, and appeared to be little the worse for his tremendous exertions. Without a further knowledge of the circumstances it would be unfair to attempt any kind of criticism, but it does seem somewhat reckless to have attempted the passage in the rough weather which is reported to have prevailed at the time.

Lecturing at Portsmouth, Mr. J. A. Yates, Chief Constructor at that dockyard, indulged in an interesting forecast of what the British Navy might become twenty years hence. He said that probably most of the battleships of which we were now so proud would be obsolete, and in their place we would have a magnificent fleet of ships of quite another type. In his opinion, instead of trying to put every variety of weapon of defence and means of defence in one vessel, we shall have fleets composed of groups of vessels of different types. Each of these groups would have one particular mode of offence, and the skilful Admiral would arrange for each to deal its blow at the proper time. For example, one group might have nothing else to think of but firing guns, and it would be well provided with those weapons. A second group might have nothing else to do but fire torpedoes, and would have to be protected so as to run the gauntlet of the enemy's guns, thinking only of its own deadly weapons. A third group might be arranged for ramming only, and would come into play against partially disabled vessels of the enemy. This grouping of forces would be something analogous to that of the Army, composed of infantry, artillery, and cavalry. His principal reason for believing that this sub-division of offence would come was the impossibility of one man being able to control such a complex weapon as a modern battleship. If, however, a ship had only one thing to do, every man on board would know what that one thing was, and would be ready to dare and do all that was required.

The general abstract of the cost of provisions, victualling, stores, and seamen's clothing for the year 1898-99 has just been issued. It appears that in the financial year ended March 31 last there was an increase of £4,130 on the expenditure of the previous year. It has to be noted that while the annual outlay in the Deptford victualling-yard, fell from £53,891 in 1897-98 to £42,702 in 1898-99, there was an increased expenditure in the other two home victualling-yards. In the Gosport yard the expenditure rose from £14,442 to £18,902, and in the Plymouth yard it rose from £6,159 to £16,439. There was only a small increase in the Malta victualling-yard, the expenditure in 1897-98 being £8,328, as against £8,907 in 1898-99. On this occasion the Comptroller and Auditor-General reports that the points which have arisen are not of a nature to call for any special remarks, and no doubt those who are responsible for the accounts feel that happy is the department which does not make history.

The athletic sports of the cadets in the Britannia was held on Wednesday afternoon. The wet and cold weather somewhat marred the success of the sports. Sixteen events took place, with results as follows:—

Place kicking. Rugby football.—Chapman 1, three goals; Stoker 2, two goals.
 Throwing the cricket ball.—E. T. Chambers 1, 93 yards 1ft.; Layard 2.
 Hundred yards, open.—Lloyd 1, Codrington 2, Stow 3—time, 12sec.
 Hundred yards, under 5ft. 3in.—Coburn 1, Ridgway 2, Philips 3—time, 13sec.
 Drop-kicking and punting.—Chapman 1, four goals; Boyle 2, three goals.
 Quarter-mile, open.—Wilkinson 1, Baddeley 2, Whitworth 3—time, 61.4-5sec. Won by four yards.
 Quarter-mile, under 5ft. 3in.—Philips 1, Coburn 2, Carew 3. Won easily, time, 63.4-5sec.

TO MILITARY MEN AND OTHERS.—PIPECLAY SUPERSEDED BY PICKERING'S "BLANCO" for Whitening Belts, Helmets, Gloves, &c. "Blanco" removes stains and discolorations, and ensures evenness of colour, and a soft silky surface. Does not dust or soil. Much better, more convenient, and cheaper than pipeclay. No trouble of preparation. "Blanco" is sold everywhere in cup-shaped blocks, in zinc non-corrosive boxes. Manufacturers: JOSEPH PICKERING and SONS, Sheffield.

Navy Personal.

The Queen has sent the following telegram to Captain the Hon. H. Lambton, commanding the Powerful:—"I sincerely welcome you all on your return home, and heartily congratulate you on the gallant and valued services which you have rendered in South Africa. I hope to see you all shortly after my return to England.—V.R.I."

The Duke of York also telegraphed:—"My warmest welcome to the Powerful on your safe return home. I congratulate you, officers, and ship's company most heartily on the splendid services you have rendered to the Queen and country. Hope you are well.—GEORGE."

Admiral Lord Charles Scott re-hoisted his flag as Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, and assumed the duties of Port Admiral, on Wednesday last, in succession to the late Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax. His lordship relieved the gallant deceased Flag officer on the Australian station when he was recalled to assume the portfolio of Second Naval Lord in 1889.

Admiral Sir A. H. Hoskins presided at a meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute on Tuesday last, when Captain Sir John Colomb (late R.M.A.), M.P., read a paper on British Defence, 1800-1900.

Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, Commander-in-Chief of the China Station, has been invited to attend the State ball at Tokio in honour of the marriage of the Crown Prince of Japan, Yoshi Hito, on the 12th prox. His Royal Highness was born August 31, 1879, and came of age 1897. His mother was Madame Yanagisawa Aiko, the Empress having failed with an heir male. It will be interesting to hear if the ball takes place in one of the Imperial palaces, or at the Imperial apartments reserved in the Roku-Mei-Kwan (Tokio Club), where the Minister for Foreign Affairs gives a yearly ball, on November 3, in honour of the natal day of his Royal master the Emperor. Royal palaces in Japan are rarely opened for public functions.

Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson is in attendance on the Prince of Wales during His Royal Highness' visit to the Danish Court.

Vice-Admirals Sir Harry Rawson and Sir John R. T. Fullerton, and Rear-Admirals Atwell P. M. Lake and A. W. Fanshawe had the honour of being included at the Vice-Regal dinner party on Friday, in last week, when H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught was the guest of His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant at Dublin Castle.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson was honoured on Tuesday last with a visit on board the Majestic from his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and proceeded to sea from Dublin Bay, with seven battleships in company, for steam tactics. After three hours' manœuvring the fleet returned to Kingstown. A distinguished party accompanied the Viceroy, some of whom were the guests of Rear-Admiral A. D. Fanshawe on board the Magnificent, while others were entertained on board the Hannibal by Captain Sir Baldwin Walker, Bart.

Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, as senior Naval officer at Devonport, on Monday last presided at a meeting of Naval officers of the Western command to consider the desirability of a suitable memorial to the late Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax. It was decided that a room should be furnished in the new Sailors' Home at Devonport, and a brass tablet placed in that institution to record this memorial to the deceased Commander-in-Chief of the Plymouth station. Captain Gerald Langley and Staff-Paymaster F. W. Mortimore (hon. treasurer), of the Nile, Inspector-General J. Fasher, Royal Naval Hospital, and Chief Inspector of Machinery W. J. Canter, undertook to form a committee to carry out the proposal.

Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd is returning from Malta in the Tyne. That vessel has been obliged to go to Corcubion through stress of weather. Staff-Paymaster W. Le G. Pullen, secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, is also a passenger.

Captain A. C. Corry, of the Hood, pays off that battleship at Chatham on the 28th inst., after three years' foreign service.

Captain H. W. S. Gibson, relieved from the duties of Senior Officer of the Naval Establishment at Sydney, N.S.W., after three years' service, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last on the P. and O. steamship Oceana. He will be compulsorily retired in April next year.

Captain F. S. Inglefield, of the Devastation, who has been detached a considerable time from Gibraltar, returns there this week from Malta to resume his Port duties, and relieves Captain J. L. Burr, of the Andromeda.

Captain Sir Richard Poore, Bart., assumed command of the Royal Naval Barracks and the duties of Flag Captain to the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport on Tuesday last, in place of Captain H. T. Grenfell, promoted to flag rank.

Captain A. L. Winsloe, of the Niobe, arrived at St. Helena on Tuesday last with the transport Milwaukee, containing the first batch of Boer prisoners deported from Simon's Town.

Captain R. N. Ommanney, Staff Captain at Devonport, and Commander A. W. Torlesse, his assistant, are, by the Articles of War, obliged to sit at courts martial should their seniority necessitate attendance thereat. This leaves Staff-Commander R. J. Rogers, Junior Assistant to the Staff Captain, who is not borne, like his colleagues, on the books of the Indus, the only officer to conduct the duties of the department at both Devonport and Kenham yards. Should he be ill or on leave when the other two officers are summoned to a court martial, an officer must be called in to do the work, and paid for extra duty, or the Boatswain of the yard must perform it. This state of things did not obtain while the Staff-Captains' department was entirely officered by the old navigating branch, and it should not be the case now that executive officers are appointed, as constant attention to the duties is more imperative in the present development of the Navy than has hitherto been requisite. The regulations by which Captains who are superintendents of dockyards are not to be summoned to courts martial without Admiralty authority should be extended to executive officers when appointed as Staff-Captains.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, left Mauritius for China on Sunday last.

Commander Arthur Dodgson, of the Basilisk, left Portsmouth on Saturday last in that sloop to replace the Beagle on the south-east coast of America. The latter vessel was recently paid off at Portsmouth.

Lieut.-Commander R. A. Cathie, of the Traveller, at Devonport, who has held that appointment for the past eight and half years, is transferred to Bally Castle coastguard station as Inspecting Officer in place of Lieutenant C. A. Buckland. Lieutenant Cathie was awarded a commission in his present rank for the gallantry he displayed at the battles of El Teb and Tamaai, 1884.

Lieutenant R. D. Scott, of the Pheasant, was fatally wounded on Saturday, at Esquimaux, by a sentry; having, as the latter states, failed to answer his challenge. The unfortunate officer, however, asserted that he replied, but his answer could not have been heard by the sentinel. He has since succumbed to his wounds.

Lieutenant (G) F. W. Dean, of the Monarch, employed with the Naval Brigade in South Africa, has been invalided, and replaced by Lieutenant (G.) P. C. Back.

Staff-Commander C. R. H. Robinson, of the Wye, left Plymouth on Thursday last for Las Palmas, Sierra Leone, and Ascension, and is due in Devonport June 3 next. He embarked four Military officers and details for Sierra Leone, and Assistant-Paymaster W. Cooper and various Naval ratings for Ascension. It may be pleasing information for the honourable member for Gateshead that this vessel has not been re-boilered since she was purchased for the Royal Navy in 1873, and that while on her last voyage she steamed 11.5 knots, a speed not exceeded in her early days.

Midshipman Wilfrid A. Egerton, of the Doris, employed with the Naval Brigade, who has been seriously ill at Kimberley, is, we are glad to say, improving in health.

Midshipman W. W. Sillem, who was mentioned in despatches, is son of Mrs. Richard Kinahan, and stepson of Vice-Admiral Kinahan.

Fleet-Paymaster Charles Vawdrey has been appointed additional in his rank to the Impregnable, for the purpose of revising the Regulations for Boys' Training Ships.

Major-General W. S. Wright, A.A.G. Royal Marine Forces, has been informed by the Admiralty of their Lordships' appreciation of the manner in which he performed his duties while holding that appointment at Whitehall.

Lieut.-Colonel Francis Lean (late R.M.L.I.), has, we regret to learn, been obliged to discontinue the editorship of "Lean's Royal Navy List," a work which he originated and has carried on for upwards of twenty years. His state of health, we understand, compels Colonel Lean to retire altogether from literary work.

Captain E. K. Story, R.M.L.I., who was under orders to embark in the Argonaut on Thursday next, has been allowed to exchange on the foreign service roster with Captain T. H. Hawkins.

BRITISH PRISONERS IN THE TRANSVAAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The following appeared in the Standard of the 10th inst., headed "The Prisoners at Pretoria":—"A Royal Irish non-com. in Pretoria has smuggled a letter to a Belfast friend, giving a pitiable account of the situation there:—"The food consists of Indian meal porridge for breakfast and supper, and a small quantity of bully soup, without bread or meat, for dinner, their guards having to exist on similar fare. The imprisoned soldiers have no clothing but their (thin cotton) khaki uniform, no work to do, and no amusement save to wash and patch their clothing."

Well, sir, considering the thousands of our soldiers who are suffering bitterly as prisoners in the Transvaal, and concluding from the Under Secretary of War's reply in the House of Commons recently, that there is no present intention of exchanging prisoners; also the fact that the cold weather will soon be very severe, and keenly felt by our poor "Absent-Minded Beggars" with insufficient food and well-patched thin cotton khaki clothing, I would ask are these brave men, suffering so sadly in the line of duty and the misfortunes of war, to be so forsaken and forgotten as to be left in so pitiable a condition on the charity and mercy of the Boers, our enemies, and to the tender-hearted Boer mothers who come to gaze on them? Surely, sir, the officials at the War Office well know where the British prisoners are located and their miserable condition: and that if they sent parcels of warm clothing for them to Pretoria, the authorities, though Boers, would not refuse the humane act of distributing the same to our suffering prisoners. Indeed, if this has not already been thought of and provided, the authorities at the War Office will certainly merit the title of absent-minded officials. Doubtless, the imprisoned officers, by their private means and through the kind thoughtfulness of their relatives and friends, will be well provided with needful comforts; but poor "Tommy Atkins" has a right, I think, to look to the War Office for, at least, the necessary warm clothing, if not to a grateful country for other comforts, and probably the Transvaal War Fund might stretch out a hand to help them.

While on the soldiers' subject, I would like to ask, through the powerful medium of your columns, if any provision exists for the allotment and remittance of their pay, while at the front, to relatives and friends, and thereby save them from all unnecessary loss, trouble, and anxiety; for, a short time ago, I read in one of our daily papers that on the arrival of some of our transports at the Cape, from one ship alone, on the hurried disembarkation of the troops, some £400 was handed over to one of the missionaries, who (though absolute strangers) visited the ship, and who hurriedly took down the addresses to whom the money was to be sent, and kindly promised to remit the several sums to the relatives and friends of the men. Surely, sir, as in the Navy, facilities should be given to the troops through their regimental officers for the periodical remittance and allotment of their wages, and eventually distributed, without cost and loss of time, to their friends and relatives, much to the comfort and convenience of our poor Absent-minded Beggars.

W. COPE DEVEREUX,
Ealing, April 10. Retired Fleet Paymaster, R.N.

Navy Foreign.

The discussion upon the Colonial Army in the French Chamber has brought something like dismay to the Navy. General de Galliffet, the Minister of War, used a line of argument which relegated the Naval defences of France to a very minor position, and the logical conclusion of his argument, according to M. Maurice Loir, is that the Navy practically has no place in the defence of the country, since batteries are sufficient protection against bombardments and the Army against disembarkation. Therefore the Government is wrong in making its great demand for outlay on account of the Navy. Of course, M. Loir's article is academic, and we can scarcely take him seriously when he says in the Moniteur de la Flotte that the hour is near when the Minister of Marine will disappear in the department of War, and that a vast organism will be created under the title of the Ministry of National Defence.

He asserts that this change will be demanded because of the assumed necessity of unity of command. General de Galliffet and General Sausier seem agreed that such unity of direction is desirable. To achieve it, however, will seem to practical politicians impossible. It may be reasonable in the case of a country like Austria to unite the naval and military forces under one ministry, but for a nation like France to attempt such a union would seem nothing less than absurd. M. Lockroy asked one question which is conspicuously true, and which has not yet received an answer. Where, he said, is the intelligence sufficiently vigorous and far-seeing as to provide at once for the defence of the Eastern frontier, to prepare for war with the troops of Italy, Austria, and Germany, to safeguard the security of the country, and at the same time of the whole of the colonial empire? Where is the intelligence capable of preparing for war throughout the whole of the colonial territory, and, if it ever were possible, with England? "As Jules Simon once said, in one of his most admirable addresses, I ask you—Where is the man?"

A terrible accident has taken place in the French torpedo-boat No. 228, under command of Lieutenant Pioger. She is a new boat built by the Forges et Chantiers de la Méditerranée, and was under trial at the time. A great part of the programme had been gone through at Cherbourg, a speed of $25\frac{1}{2}$ knots having been attained, and the engineers were full of satisfaction, for the French Admiralty was to give a bounty of 20,000 francs for every half knot above the contract speed. All at once there was a violent shock, and the stokehold and boiler-room were filled with steam. A piston rod had broken and the cylinder cover had given way. Five men were very seriously burnt and many in lesser degree. A panic ensued, and one man, unable to bear the agony, threw himself into the sea and was lost. Signals of distress were made, and the boat was towed into the dockyard at Cherbourg.

When the Kearsarge and the Kentucky were designed great doubt was expressed in many circles, and still exists, as to the wisdom of placing four guns in the double turret. Those who advocated the plan held that the arrangement would give a commanding fire, while those who were opposed to it urged that a single shell might result in putting four guns out of action. It was questioned also whether the arrangement of the superposed turret could be made to work, and whether the turret would be sufficiently strong for the great shock caused by the firing of so many guns. The Kearsarge has, however, gone through some trials with success, though, of course, they can throw no light upon the wisdom of adopting this principle of gun-mounting. It appears that the firing of the Kearsarge's guns does not affect the stability of the turret or cause any inconvenience to the ship. The firing of one gun does not injuriously affect another, and when three guns were fired together the turret suffered no damage. It was intended to try all four pieces at once but the electric installation for one was not ready. The two pairs of 8-inch guns were fired together, and Admiral Sampson has declared that in his opinion the Kearsarge is superior to any battle-ship afloat.

EMBODIMENT OF THE MILITIA.

Her Majesty the Queen having been graciously pleased by Royal Proclamation, dated Oct. 26, 1899, order the Secretary of State for War to give the necessary directions for embodying all or any part of the Militia, all Militia units not hitherto embodied will be embodied at their respective headquarters. The units now undergoing their annual training and the Western Division, Submarine Miners, will be embodied on April 14; the Thames Division, Submarine Miners, on April 23; the Milford Haven and the Humber Divisions, Submarine Miners, on May 1; and the remaining units on dates to be hereafter notified, but not earlier than May 1.

Commanding officers of the undermentioned units will comply with the instructions contained in Sections 21 and 22 of the Militia Act, 1882, as soon as the notification of embodiment reaches them.

Paragraphs 4 to 37 of Army Order 208 (a) of 1899, as amended by Army Orders 57, 87* and 89* of 1900, will apply to the following units, except that the amounts issuable for the formation of the officers' and sergeants' messes of the Antrim Artillery, the Donegal Artillery, the Durham Artillery, and the Edinburgh Artillery will be reduced by the amounts already issued for the companies proceeding to South Africa.

The units will be required to serve on embodiment at the stations specified below:—

ROYAL RESERVE REGIMENTS.

An Army Order has been issued, dated the 7th inst., to this effect:—

“Issue of Separation Allowance, &c., to the Families of Ex-soldiers Re-enlisted for Home Service:—

“1. With reference to Paragraph 5 of the Royal Warrant, dated Feb. 17 (Army Order 48 of 1900), separation allowance and half-pay, when issuable, will be paid to the families of the ex-soldiers re-enlisted for Army Service by the paymasters who issue separation allowance to the wives and families of mobilised reservists of the unit to which the re-enlisted soldier formerly belonged, except in the case of re-enlisted ex-soldiers:

“(a.) Of the Household Cavalry, whose families will be paid by the Chief Paymaster, Home District.

“(b.) Of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, whose families will be paid by the Chief Paymaster, Devonport.

“(c.) Of the Royal Marine Artillery, whose families will be paid by the Chief Paymaster, Portsmouth.

“2. Officers commanding Royal Reserve regiments and officers commanding all other units to which men have been posted under Paragraph 4 of Army Order 78 (Special Army Order, dated March 7) of 1900, will at once furnish the paymasters concerned with nominal rolls showing the number, rank, and name of each married soldier, the Christian name and full postal address of his wife, and the sex and ages of children (if any). Officers commanding will be held responsible that any casualties affecting this roll are immediately notified to the paymasters issuing the separation allowances.

About 500 ex-soldiers of the Inniskilling, Irish, Munster, and Dublin Fusiliers have joined the 10th Royal Irish Fusilier Reserve Regiment at the Palace Barracks, Holywood, Belfast. Of this number 190 belonged to the Dublin Fusiliers.

The hon. secretary of the Imperial War Fund (Col. Tully, 20, Bucklersbury) reports that the number of cases relieved are now between 700 and 800. The amount disbursed to representatives of non-commissioned officers and men is upwards of £7,000, exclusive of the officers' wives and widows. This fund is admirably administered.

The War Office desires it to be known that Army pensioners in receipt of permanent pensions, who enlist in Reserve battalions, will, on their return to civil life, continue to draw the pensions of which they were in receipt prior to their enlistment. During their year's service in the Reserve battalions they will elect either (1) to draw their pension for the year (in addition to any Army pay they may receive as enlisted soldiers), or (2) to take the £12 bounty on enlistment and the £10 bounty on discharge. In the former case they will, on the completion of their year's service, receive their original pension, together with any increase for which their further service may have qualified them. In the latter case they will receive only their original pension.

THE HORSE AND THE EMPIRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE “ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.”

SIR,—I shall be glad if you will kindly allow me space to say a few words on a very important subject, viz., a national stud. I do not think too much attention can well be given to it at the present time, nor can the public mind learn too much about it. “We can always buy horses from other people” we are told; but could we in the event of a great European war when everybody was trying to do the same thing? No. There is no doubt that an annual supply of young horses bred by ourselves as a certainty, and with all their work in front of them, would be of untold value to the country, an enormous security, and cheap at any price. If this is a fact—and it is established that it is better to do things for ourselves than depend on other people—the question comes up as to what line would be the best line to take up. There is only one answer to that in my opinion, and that is to place the question in the hands of the Hunters Improvement Society, and let them thresh it out at the expense of the Government. The society is doing excellent work, it has some of the best men in England behind it, it encourages and establishes the very horse that is most suited for soldiers' work, for the horse that can carry a man over the Quorn country in a severe run is the same horse that can carry a man through a long march or a trying flanking movement, and it further has a theory of breeding that is nothing less than a means of saving the Empire from destruction. The course is clear, then, if only the two could be brought together. The result could not fail to be a success. It only wants trying. Let the Government put 10,000 mares in the hands of the society, and stand behind them, either in taking farms or making an arrangement with the farmers to each take a mare: there is no question but what it could be made to work, and that a grand type of horse could be produced. And the question of the theory of breeding, there is a great deal more in it than the ordinary public understand. Ask General French if there isn't. Ask him if he would rather not have a horse bred from a strain of good stayers than a horse bred from a soft and bad family. Ask him which he could most depend upon in a long march or dashing cavalry movement. I don't think he would be long giving you an answer. It is all very well for the Government to encourage the sires, as they are doing in England and Ireland, but we want the mares and foals as well. It is no fun breeding stock for foreign Governments. It is our cavalry we want to mount, not the enemy's. This question, then, is a very important one. For heaven's sake let us face it.

A Royal Warrant has been issued amending the regulations as to pay and retired pay of officers of the embodied Militia who have retired from the Regular Army on retired pay or gratuity. The issue of pay and retired pay to such officers is to be subject to the following conditions: (a) During embodiment they shall be allowed to draw their retired pay, or shall be excused the deduction from their effective pay prescribed by Article 489 of the Pay Warrant, for a period equal to that of the annual training of their unit. (b) They shall be allowed to reckon their embodied service, except the period referred to in (a) as service for retired pay, &c. (c) On disembodiment they shall be granted either the increase of retired pay or gratuity for which they may be eligible in virtue of their additional service, or the gratuity provided for other officers of the embodied Militia by Article 601c of the Pay Warrant.

AITCHISON'S PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS

ONLY WEIGHS 5 OUNCES, ONLY 1 INCH THICK CLOSED.

The Army and Navy Gazette, Feb. 24th, 1900, says:—“The question of bulk as well as weight should be well considered when selecting a glass for service. Many of the glasses which are now being taken out to South Africa will never be used at all, owing to the nuisance of having a big leather case bumping about on the shoulders. The Patent Pocket Field Glass, however, which Messrs. Aitchison, the opticians, have made, will prove one of the most useful accessories which a scout can possess, as it can be carried readily in the pocket, can be brought into use very quickly owing to the system of rapid focus used, and is at the same time more powerful than many glasses three times its size.”

As supplied to the Imperial Yeomanry, Lord Loch's Contingent, Honourable Artillery Company. Several Thousands are now in use in South Africa.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES OF THE WAR.

Col. Sir Howard Vincent, M.P., read a paper at the Royal United Service Institution on Monday on "Personal Observations and Impressions of the Forces and Military Establishments now in South Africa." Major-General Maurice, commanding the Woolwich District, occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. In the course of a long address Sir Howard Vincent, who recently visited the various armies, camps, and military establishments in South Africa, said that no great army in the field had ever been fed so well and with such extraordinary regularity as the British force in South Africa, which now numbers about a quarter of a million persons, with 40,000 horses and 30,000 mules. It was no less true that no army had ever been better doctored. Stomach, spine, and head wounds had alone proved serious, and it remained to be seen if invention could not find some portable protection, such as the Boynton shield, against some of these in the next war. Protection against enteric fever demanded even greater attention. The City of London and Great Britain had reason to be amply satisfied with the performances of their Volunteer forces, and so had the colonies. The Volunteer troops in the field numbered some 26,000, and it was not too much to say that the honours so far rested mainly with them. As to the Regulars, their bravery, endurance, and courage had been that of Blenheim, of the Peninsula, of Waterloo, of the Crimea, and of the Indian Mutiny. After all had been said, the Boers had taught us and all the world valuable lessons in the art of war. Their mobility, their power of moving heavy ordnance to and from distant parts of the country, and their command as much of artillery as of rifle fire were extraordinary, and they had shown the extreme value of entrenchments and the scientific utilisation of cover. The war had shown that the day of cavalry was now and had still to come, that the battle was to the swift as distinguished from the impetuous, that the day of the sword, save as an emblem, was over, that the question of armament was a pressing one with us, and that tactics and formations would have to be revised. A discussion followed.

THE OFFICERS' FAMILIES FUND.

The general committee of the Officers' Families Fund have just held their fifth monthly meeting at Lansdowne House, when there were present, among others, Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Lady Audrey Buller. Gen. Godfrey Clerk reported that the executive committee had met ten times since the last general meeting and dealt with 99 fresh applications as compared with 76 during the previous month; 48 former cases had been reconsidered, and it had been found advisable to renew almost all weekly and monthly allowances, the circumstances of few of the recipients having improved. Amongst the grants made were three to officers' widows, and a presentation to the Bath School for Officers' Daughters had been purchased for the motherless child of a distinguished officer killed in action. Assistance had been rendered to 14 widowed mothers of officers, who, depending usually upon allowances their sons were able to make them in times of peace, were suffering severely from the war, which made such allowances impossible. Important donations recently received included a picture presented by Mr. Caton Woodville, which had been sold for £210. Mr. and Mrs. Blackburn had collected a sum of £326 at an entertainment given by them at the Queen's Hall. A collection of pictures presented to Lady Lansdowne had been sold at the Amateur Art Exhibition and had brought in £230. Altogether, though subscriptions were not coming in as plentifully as hitherto, the financial position continued a satisfactory one. It was also announced that Princess Henry of Battenberg and the Duchess of York had consented to become vice-presidents of the fund. Lady Lansdowne stated that the managers of the Alhambra were getting up a matinée on May 1 for the benefit of the fund. It was hoped that it would be largely patronised, and it would probably bring in a considerable sum. Lady Audrey Buller made known a similar generous offer from Mr. George Alexander, who had promised to organise a matinée at the St. James's Theatre on May 10. All communications, as hitherto, should be made to Lady Lansdowne or the hon. secretary, Lansdowne House, Berkeley Square, and donations should be sent to the hon. treasurer, Colonel G. Ide, C.B., 23, Queen Anne's Gate.

PROMOTION R.A. AND R.E.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I entirely agree with the views expressed by "Anxious Father" and "Spectator" in your late issues as to the gross injustice of keeping 2nd Lieutenants of these scientific corps for three years in that rank, in consequence of which ruling they are superseded by so many Linesmen—Militiamen and Yeomanry. Can nothing be done by Service members to induce the Secretary of State for War to remedy this grievance?

April 7.

LIEUT.-COLONEL RETIRED.

The Lord Mayor of Liverpool, on the requisition of the Chamber of Commerce, the Mersey Dock Board, and all the large commercial associations of the city, lately called a town's meeting "to consider the question of the defences of Liverpool, which the requisitionists declared to be a matter of urgent importance." The meeting was to have taken place on Monday last. A private meeting, however, was held previously at the Town Hall, the Lord Mayor presiding, and it was unanimously resolved, "That, having had the opportunity of consulting the Major-General commanding the North-West District regarding the defences of the port of Liverpool, this meeting of requisitionists and others resolves that there is no longer a need for a public meeting being held, and requests the Lord Mayor of Liverpool to rescind the notice calling the public meeting."

THE RESERVE OF OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I fully agree with what your correspondent "Ex-Linesman" says in his letter in your issue of the 7th inst., but I think when drawing attention to the point of promotion he should also have mentioned the following:—That there should be separate lists for officers who have served in the Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers. Under the present Royal Warrant Captains or Field Officers of the Militia who have served in seven annual trainings may be gazetted Captains in the Reserve of Officers. This, with his preliminary drill, will probably mean that he has passed about twelve months at odd times actually doing duty with his regiment. In many cases, doubtless, he has done much more time with the colours, as there are many ways in which a Militia Officer can do duty with his Regimental Depot, &c., but by the Regulations the seven trainings is the only condition to fulfil. As in your correspondent's case such a Militia Reserve Officer would be senior to him, though, retiring as a fairly senior subaltern, he doubtless had six or seven years' service as a regular officer. Is this fair or to the good of the Service? Can the Militia Captain of twelve months' colour service know as much as the regimental subaltern of six years or more?

Officers of the Reserve should go back to the Service in which they served, Militia officers to Militia regiments and Volunteer officers to Volunteer regiments. I also cannot see the value to the Service in appointing officers who still hold commissions in the Militia or Volunteers to the Reserve of Officers. At the present time all Militia officers who are not yet embodied will be so on or about May 1, and therefore they become unavailable for duty as Reserve officers, as with the present dearth of officers surely they will be wanted with their own regiments. Therefore, by appointing officers serving in the Auxiliary forces to the Reserve of Officers the authorities are only constituting a paper force, as their names would appear in two places, (1) as belonging to their own regiments, (2) as officers of the Reserve of Officers. In answer to this it may be said that they will never be required for both positions at once, but how about the present time, when it is notorious that all the Royal Reserve regiments have hardly any officers at all?

A REGULAR RESERVE OFFICER.

The 5th Yeomanry Brigade, consisting of the Shropshire and Worcestershire Regts., commanded by Lord Windsor, is the first in the kingdom to definitely settle the place and time of the month's permanent duty training under the scheme recently promulgated by the War Office, and has decided to hold a camp of instruction at Ross, in Herefordshire, commencing in the middle of May. The brigade is expected to muster between 500 and 600 men and horses, and has, in addition, about 150 officers and men serving with the Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa. Recruiting for the force has been very brisk lately, and an excellent class of young men have joined the ranks.

At a meeting of the council of the Polo Pony Society at 12, Hanover Square, a resolution was unanimously passed upon the motion of the president, Sir Richard Green Price, seconded by Lord Arthur Cecil, to this effect:—"That, in the opinion of the council of this society, the formation of a mounted pony corps as an addition to the Regular Army of Great Britain would prove a national advantage, and ought to be put into practice." Sir Richard, in submitting the resolution, referred to the valuable scouting work done with ponies during the present war. It was essential that in future their use should become a regular part of the work. The object of the society was to make the pony of England the very best that could be found, and its use in the Army would greatly help what they had in view.

COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

An examination of candidates for the Army will be held on June 26 and following days.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

There will be 160 cadetships at the Royal Military College awarded, namely: 20 for Cavalry, 10 for Foot Guards, 125 for Infantry, and 5 for West India Regiment. The Cavalry and Foot Guards candidates will be taken on one list, and no candidate will be accepted for the Foot Guards unless he is among the first 30 on the combined Cavalry and Foot Guards list.

In the total of 145 cadetships allotted to Cavalry and Infantry (excluding Foot Guards and West India Regiment) are included a certain number carrying with them a nomination to the Indian Staff Corps. The exact number and allotment of these is determined as follows:—Thirty-five cadetships in all are given carrying this nomination. All Queen's cadets (British and Indian) and honorary Queen's cadets (Indian) have a right to one of these if they choose to take it. The balance, after these claims have been satisfied, will be allotted in order of merit to such of the successful Cavalry and Infantry candidates as have entered themselves as desirous of the Indian Staff Corps in their "form of particulars."

The successful competitors will be required to join the college on Aug. 15, and will receive all necessary instructions from the Governor.

ROYAL MARINE LIGHT INFANTRY.

Fourteen commissions for the Royal Marine Light Infantry will also be given. Candidates for these commissions (who have sent in the same application and "form of particulars" as other candidates to the Secretary, Civil Service Commission) must also notify their desire to be appointed to the Royal Marine Light Infantry to the Secretary to the Admiralty, Whitehall. The successful candidates will receive all necessary instructions from the Admiralty.

UNIVERSITY CANDIDATES.

Thirty commissions will be offered for competition by University candidates under the conditions laid down in the regulations on this subject.

The attention of candidates is directed to Appendix I. of the published regulations, in which the general conditions as to height, weight, chest measurement, eyesight, &c., are given.

An Army Order states that maps have been published by the Intelligence Division, War Office, of "Transvaal and Orange Free State. Intelligence Division, No. 1,367. Scale, 1:250,000. Further sheets published—Taunus, Vryburg, Mafeking, Lichtenburg, Winburg, and Kronstad, 1s. each."

It has been decided to hold a great National Bazaar at the Empress Rooms and in the adjoining grounds on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, May 24, 25, and 26. A most influential committee has been formed, and it is hoped that the bazaar may be in every sense a national one. The proceeds will be appropriated to sufferers by the war. A very influential committee has been formed, of which Lord Avebury is hon. treasurer, and Messrs. A. J. Coke and J. Mason hon. secretaries. A feature will be stalls provided over by ladies representing all Arms and Corps of the Service.

[Where not otherwise specified the foregoing commissions and appointments bear date April 11.]

An examination for commissions in Her Majesty's Indian Medical Service will be held in London in August. The exact date of the examination and the number of commissions to be competed for will be announced hereafter.

Under the patronage of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London, an Army and Navy Exhibition will be held at the Royal Aquarium, May 24 to July 7, the Widows' and Orphans' Mansion House Fund benefiting two-thirds ticket receipts.

Officers have been informed that until further orders any pistol ammunition they may purchase from private sources for use on active service must be made as a solid bullet. No mushroom pattern bullet is to be taken to South Africa.

The executive of the Building Trades' Gift to the Nation announce a material increase in the list of contributions in kind and monetary subscriptions towards the Homes for Discharged Soldiers being erected at Bisleigh under the Princess Christian's scheme. During the month of March no less than eighty different firms made large presents of materials or fittings, whilst over £1,300 was brought together in money. Of the monetary subscriptions no less than £400 was in the form of sixpences and shillings collected by workmen, one firm alone sending in £80 as a contribution of 2,100 men. The interest shown by masters and men alike has been a most pleasing feature in the scheme. Among the donors of money are Mr. Edwin O. Sachs (£200), the chairman of the "Gift," who is also giving his personal services as honorary architect ; Messrs. Holland and Hannan (50 guineas), the Arlesley Brick Company (£50), Messrs. John Bazley, White, and Co. (£50), and the executors of the late Henry Ryden (£50). Among the presents in kind there is a splendid contribution in the form of an iron church, 50ft. long, which will accommodate the whole of the inmates of the Homes, this being a gift by Messrs. Dixon and Co. ; the heating, general equipment, foundations, &c., for this church will be provided by several other donors. To complete the scheme, another £5,000 in money is, however, still required, as well as several gifts in kind for various departments, particularly in respect to the necessary timber, joinery, facing bricks, and iron roof trusses.

In view of future National Defence arrangements, the War Office has issued instructions, in compliance with which a register is being compiled of the whole of the public buildings in the country available for the accommodation of troops if required. Returns are also in course of preparation by the Chiefs of Constabulary throughout the country of the number and ownership of houses likewise available for this purpose.

In response to a suggestion that the conditions under which Volunteer corps are this year to encamp should be modified, it is announced from the War Office "that the regulations for this year's emergency camps have been drawn up after most careful consideration and cannot be departed from. Any corps which is unable to fulfil the conditions laid down in those regulations must be content with the ordinary camp allowance granted by paragraph 573 of the Volunteer Regulations."

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING
GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-
bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

ON Wednesday Lord Roberts's despatches, dated February 13, from the Camp, Dekiel Drift, Riet River, relative to the operations between January 17 and 24 for the relief of Ladysmith, which ended with the retirement from Spion Kop, were published. They have come as a surprise, and are not pleasant reading. The Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, commenting on the operations, distinctly blames the action of the General commanding the Army in Natal, as well as that of two of his subordinate officers, Sir Charles Warren and Lieut.-Colonel Thorneycroft, who took prominent parts in the operations referred to, and who were responsible for the abandonment of Spion Kop. Without for a moment questioning the correctness of the judgment passed by the Commander-in-Chief, and, believing in the light of it that serious faults were committed, we much doubt the wisdom of giving it to the world at the present time. The importance of upholding the character and prestige of an army in the field, of fostering in the subordinates an unshaken confidence in their leaders, and, above all, of safeguarding discipline, might have suggested the inopportune publication, three months after the events, of these adverse comments on the actions of the General commanding the Army and of others, all of whom still—so far as is known—hold their commands, and apparently possess the entire confidence of those under them. In view of the depressing effect likely to be produced on the Army in Natal by the publication of these despatches, already, no doubt, communicated to Sir Redvers Buller with Lord Roberts's strictures, the telegram of a war correspondent from Ladysmith, dated Tuesday, the 17th, stating that the condition of affairs in that part of the theatre of war was one of "absolute lifelessness," need cause no surprise.

The long pause in the operations rendered necessary by the needs of the troops still continues. As a result there has been for some time a growing restlessness among the enemy, which may account to some extent for the great raid through the south-east of the Orange State. That movement in which 12,000 burghers, dispersed in roving commandoes, have been taking part, was in itself a bold conception, though attended by considerable danger. Besides satisfying the craving of the enemy for activity, without which it would be difficult to keep the burghers in the field, it has served many purposes. Two distinct successes over the British have been scored at Koorn Drift and at Reddersburg; the most fertile portions of the Orange State have been overrun, and large supplies of food secured for the replenishment of the fast-dwindling stores at Kroonstad; many burghers who had taken the oath to take up arms no more against the British have been forcibly commandeered; commandoes have advanced almost within striking distance of Lord Roberts's line of communications, and the northern border of Cape Colony; a part of General Brabant's colonial force under Colonel Dalgety has for many days been invested at Jammer-Berg Drift near Wepener on the Basuto border; and the hope has been raised in the burghers' breasts of recapturing Bloemfontein by luring away the British from its neighbourhood to chase the raiders through country of their own choosing. Notwithstanding the two successes referred to and the destruction of the Bloemfontein waterworks, the results so far must have proved disappointing to the enemy and may prove disastrous to some of them. The capital and the southern railway, its great artery of supply, are now held securely by an overwhelming force, and any movement against them to be effective must give more evidence of dash, vigour, and concerted action than can be traced in the recent movements of the raiding commandoes. Since the attack on Wepener commenced, and especially since the spirited sortie on the 10th inst. of Colonel Dalgety's men, when severe loss was inflicted on the Boers, public interest has been divided between this place and Mafeking. On Saturday the attack was slackening, and on Monday it was prematurely reported that the Boers, abandoning further attempts to capture the position, were trekking, the Transvaalers going north, and the Free Staters, some 6,000 strong, making apparently for Bethulie on the southern border. Lord Roberts has, however, since reported that the force at Wepener was still surrounded, but that the attack was very half-hearted, the enemy being apprehensive about their own security, as relief columns were approaching from two quarters. General Rundle's (Eighth) Division was marching due east from Reddersburg, and General Brabant, with the remainder of his force, followed by General Hart's Brigade, lately arrived from Natal, in support, was coming from the south via Rouxville. In addition to these converging forces. General Chermide's Division moved on Saturday to Marshoutfontein, seventeen miles east of the railway, watching a commando near De Wet's Dorp, and covering General Rundle's left flank, while the railway itself was held in their rear at Bethulie Station by General Knox's Brigade in support. A belated report, dated on Monday, has been received announcing the seizure of De Wet's Dorp by the British, but the report needs confirmation. The proximity of Wepener to Basutoland is a source of increased uneasiness to the Boers, who, having completely invested Colonel Dalgety's position, have the Basuto border close behind them to the east. The struggle is being watched with keen interest by 3,000 of the warlike Basutos, massed within their border to resist any encroachment by the Boers on their territory. As the British advance, each day adds to the insecurity of the Boers' position, and we shall probably shortly hear of a hasty trek northwards from Wepener along the eastern border, and that the enemy have again succeeded in eluding our forces with their habitual dexterity. From Bloemfontein to Ladybrand, between which place and the border the trek would probably pass, the distance is nearly eighty miles. Ladybrand is strongly held by the Boers, who have also detachments at Thaba N'chu and to the south-east of the capital, so posted as to screen a withdrawal of their commandoes from the south. Lord Roberts would hesitate to detach his newly-horsed mounted troops, and no others would be of much avail, on an exhausting expedition to attempt to cut off the retreating raiders, on the eve of the more important movement of the entire Army towards Pretoria.

While the armies in South Africa await the order to advance, a glance at their actual fighting strength may be useful. In the aggregate the British and Colonial forces, combatant and non-combatant, now number but little short of 200,000 men. They are distributed over a front of some 300 miles, stretching from Warrenton in the west to Elandslaagte north of Ladysmith in the east, and they guard nearly 1,800 miles of railway, of which about 165 miles traverse the recently conquered territory in the Orange Free State, from Karee Siding to the Orange River. Lord Roberts's fine Army, holding the central area of the theatre of war, comprises six and a-half divisions of infantry, one of cavalry, and one of mounted infantry. It is posted round Bloemfontein in convenient camps, and occupies, besides certain strategic points affording ready means of concentrating for defence of the lines of communications. Its approximate fighting strength reaches nearly 60,000 combatants with 216 guns and howitzers of the Royal Artillery, giving a proportion of $3\frac{1}{2}$ guns per thousand fighting men. There are also a few naval 12prs. and 4.7in. guns and part of a siege train. The Army of Natal, holding a forward position in the eastern area of the theatre of war, consists at present of three and a-half infantry divisions, three cavalry brigades, one brigade of mounted infantry, and corps troops. It numbers so far as can be ascertained about 36,000 combatants with ninety-six field guns and howitzers, giving a proportion of about $2\frac{3}{4}$ pieces per thousand men in the fighting line. There are, however, in addition a considerable number of Naval guns, which more than compensate in the superior power of the ordnance for the low proportion of land service guns. In the extreme west, Lord Methuen has under his orders, and distributed between Boshof, Jacobsdal, Kimberley, and Warrenton, some 14,000 combatants. About 35,000 combatants, composed of Militia and Colonial troops, protect the railways of Cape Colony and Natal, and hold towns requiring garrisons. The columns commanded by General Brabant, Colonel Parsons at Carnarvon, and Colonel Plumer, together with the garrison of Mafeking, complete the total fighting strength, which, great as it is, has not yet reached its maximum, and an entirely new force now landing at Beira will shortly form a fresh element of strength, not alone by its numbers and mobility, but by the strategical position it will occupy.

There has been no fresh development at Elandsplaagte since the 11th inst. The Boers hold a series of strong positions on the ridges lying between Sunday's River and Dundee, in expectation of an attack along the line of the railway. Parties still attempt to work round the British right flank, but the attack of the 10th on that flank is supposed to have been a feint to cover a move towards Van Reenan's Pass to prevent any attempt on Sir Redvers Buller's part to open a passage through the Drakensbergs in the Harrismith direction. Restlessness is apparent in the enemy's ranks on the Biggarsberg as it is at Kroonstad, and their patrols push out towards the British lines with considerable boldness. One was reported on Sunday near to Dewdrop, ten miles west of Ladysmith, and another from Waschbank succeeded in destroying the colliery works near Wessel's Nek within five miles of Elandsplaagte. The strength of the enemy is said to be 15,000, but any serious movement on their part to the south is barred by the occupation of Jonon's Kop on the left and of Lombard's Kop and Umbulwane Mountain on the right of the British strategic line.

Up to the 11th inst. things went fairly well within the beleaguered trenches of Mafeking. A recent bearer of news from the town was Lieutenant Smitheman, of the Rhodesian Regiment, who with much boldness and adroitness, succeeded in passing both in and out of the town through the Boer lines. The courage of the little garrison was still undaunted, but spirits were less buoyant, as the pinch of hunger was being felt, and hope of early release was fading from view. Colonel Plumer's force is strongly entrenched to the north-west of the town, but his efforts to reach it have been effectually blocked by the Boers, who in considerable numbers dominate the country as far south as Fourteen Streams, whence they continue to shell the British on the opposite side of the Vaal at Warrenton. Although rebellion has been quelled throughout Cape Colony south of the Vaal, the efforts of the enemy to rekindle it have not ceased. General Settle has reported from Kenhardt that 200 Boers attacked Dopas Poort on the 13th inst., and were repulsed with heavy loss. Sir F. Carrington has arrived at Beira. The Australian Bushmen precede him to Salisbury, whence he is expected to push on to Mafeking. His mission is a most important one, and we wish it all success. Meanwhile, a force of 250 Boers is reported to be striking north from the Transvaal to intercept him. In the interest of the whole of South Africa it is to be hoped that the protracted delay at Bloemfontein will speedily terminate, and that the Army there, renewed in strength, and under propitious skies, may again set forward.

THE SPION KOP DESPATCHES.

FOR six weeks the War Office were in possession of the letter from Lord Roberts of February 13, covering and commenting on Sir R. Buller's despatch of January 30, to which was attached Sir C. Warren's report of the operations on Spion Kop. The curt announcement that General Gatacre had been "ordered to return to England" a few days before had caused a great sensation. It was a painful one too. The sudden deprivation by the Commander-in-Chief of the command of his division in the face of the enemy of an officer of long and distinguished service came like a shock to the Army and to the public who were acquainted with the reputation of Sir William in India and in Egypt; but it was taken for granted that the punishment was needed on account of the unfitness for his trust which was proved to Lord Roberts by the gallant officer's conduct of operations. We were very sorry. But Lord Roberts was the sole judge of the case. It was not known or suspected at the time that there were and had been for weeks in the hands of the Government a most severe condemnation of Generals in high command by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief in South Africa for their share in the failure of the attempt to relieve Ladysmith which had caused such bitter disappointment at the close of last January.

The morning papers of last Wednesday galvanised us. There in extenso from the London Gazette of the night before were official documents for all the world to read—and for the Army in South Africa to reflect upon presently? Why were they published on April 17 instead of the week after they were read and considered in Pall Mall? What is the object of the Government in publishing them on the eve of the great movement on which all our thoughts are fixed? Sir R. Buller is in command of a large force in Natal; Sir C. Warren holds his place as a divisional leader. Those who read the despatches and the comments and criticisms upon them may select the delinquents who have been censured, and probably the public are confident that some great coup will follow; but it is not wise to change horses crossing a ford, and unless it is imperatively necessitated by the unfitness of a beast, it is well not to try to do it. The matter will probably be taken out of the hands of the authorities. Sir R. Buller and Sir C. Warren may determine on a course of action which will cause very great changes and difficulties at a critical moment, and meantime we must await an answer to the question, Why were the despatches of January 30 only published on April 17, and why were they published at all?

The despatches are not pleasant reading. The closer, however, one studies the reports the clearer it becomes that our system has much to answer for. Lord Roberts says that Sir R. Buller was too much inclined to give advice, instead of orders. A comprehensive system, by which officers, with clear ideas on strategy and tactics, work together under generals who thoroughly understand each other's views, has yet to be devised for the British Army. To its absence must be ascribed the extraordinary lack of grip displayed by British generals at the battle of Spion Kop. There was no sign anywhere of a masterful spirit which controlled the mind and actions of every officer taking part in the engagement. The oil for the signal lamps gave out, the heliograph could not work on account of the heavy firing, the supply of food and water was short, and, to crown all, after General Woodgate fell, General Coke left the hill at a critical moment under the impression that Colonel Hill took his place, whereas, as a matter of fact, a junior major had been invested with command. Surely such a chapter of accidents, which might have been avoided, never before occurred, even in the present war. But it is the system which is at fault, to a great extent, a system which affords senior officers no opportunities of studying the art of war practically in this country. The neglect to throw up entrenchments was another blunder due to our military system. The British trooper is not trained to use the pick and spade in time of peace, nor is he given to understand their importance in defensive tactics. Over and over again a disaster might have been averted had our men taken a lesson from the enemy in the matter of entrenchments, and this is especially true of Spion Kop. Fortunately we are learning many valuable lessons in this war, and so, too, are others, who are the severest critics of our much over-abused generals.

LORD ROBERTS IN THE ORANGE STATE.

"LORD ROBERTS in the Free State!" has been a familiar formula in the headings of the daily papers for some time past. It is a good six weeks since the public eye rested on the announcement of the fact with pleasure as a tide mark in the flow of our invasion of the Republic. We had "Buller in Natal" for many weeks before that, and we have it yet to-day. There have been other "fixtures" for some time back; one of peculiar interest—"Baden-Powell in Mafeking"—that it would much gratify us to have changed as soon as possible. "Wellesley at Torres Vedras!" "Raglan before Sebastopol!" and the like would be telling in these telegraphic days, but they were not possible in the days when the news came with halting steps to editors and Ministers alike. On the whole it would be for the benefit of the Press if the Americanisms which have taken such a hold on the newspapers here were pruned down or even cut away altogether. There is a manifest disadvantage in any device which lowers the character of any particular journal in the estimation of the public, and if the name of a particular organ is associated with the use of catchpenny headlines and the circulation of "sensational," in the sense of unfounded, reports of victories or disasters in wartime, the consequences will be felt in due time over the counter.

There was a great cudgelling of brains in sub-editorial rooms towards the close of March and in the early part of this month to furnish headlines to the news from South Africa, which was no news at all, and the public tired of the transformation of the old despatches concerning Clements' crossings and Gatacre's advances and Plumer's imminent relief of Mafeking, of Buller's position in Natal, of Kitchener's doings at Prieska. The word "mum" had gone forth to the censors in the land, and the correspondents had a vacation; but there will soon be no need of invention, imagination, or capital letters to emphasize the intelligence which may be expected from day to day, as ere ten days are over the British Army will be marching in an irresistible wave towards its objective.

Army Notes.

It is not generally known that when the Queen commanded the establishment of a regiment of Irish Guards, Her Majesty restored to the Army a corps that it once possessed. When Charles II. at the Restoration established his Household Brigade, he allotted regiments of guards to each of the three kingdoms. The Irish Guards were raised in the early part of 1662. On March 24 of that year a Royal warrant was issued to the Earl of Sandwich, Master of the Great Wardrobe. In it occurred these words:—"Yellow Taffety and Crimson for 12 Colours for a Regiment of Foot and that you cause Our badges to be printed and gilded thereon, and that you deliver the same parcells of Taffety at the same rate as they were furnished for Our Regiment of Foot, and likewise 12 Ensign-staves with guilt heades and 12 pair of Tassells crimson and gold, and that you also cause Our Badges to painted and gilded on 25 drummes after the same manner as Our drummes of Our own Regiment of Foot. . . . and that you deliver the same to Our right, trusty &c., James Duke of Ormond, Lieutenant of Our Kingdom of Ireland." On April 23 the King issued a patent stating that "His Majesty having thought fit to raise in England a regiment of twelve hundred to be his Guards in Ireland," he authorised the Duke of Ormond to raise the men "in this Our Kingdom of England by beat of drum, proclamations, or otherwise." The Duke's fifth son, Richard, Earl of Arran, was appointed to command the new regiment, which marched from London to embark for Ireland in May. The headquarters of the regiment were at Dublin, and on several occasions the Irish Guards did good service in putting down risings. During Monmouth's rebellion four companies were brought to Chester, but were sent back after the battle of Sedgemoor, their services not being required. When Tyrconnel became Lieutenant-General in Ireland the Irish Army was remodelled, and 400 Protestants in the Irish Guards were turned out, their places being filled by Roman Catholics. In 1668 seven of the thirteen companies, of which the Irish Guards then consisted, were brought to England to join the Army being "assembled by James," to repel the invasion of William of Orange. They were stationed at Tilbury, and when the Prince of Orange entered London, they were disarmed and marched under a Dutch escort to the Isle of Wight, whence after a short detention they were transferred to the service of the Emperor of Germany. The remaining six companies, left in Ireland, declared for James II. and served in his army in all the fighting with William down to the final capitulation of Limerick in 1691. Under the Convention then signed all James II.'s Irish regiments were allowed to volunteer for the French Army, and the Irish Guards went to France. There they became the "Royal Regiment of Ireland," and as such took part in a continuous war between Louis XIV. and William III. and Anne. At Neerwinden, and in a battle near Tournay, they were opposed to the only Irish regiment that was retained in William's service, the Royal Irish. After the Peace of Utrecht in 1714 the Royal Regiment of Ireland ceased to exist, the men being absorbed in other regiments of the French-Irish Brigade. In Queen Anne's time a proposal was made to raise another regiment of Irish Guards; but it was never carried out.

"The best year since the introduction of the short-service system," writes the Inspector-General of Recruiting in his report for 1899, issued this week as a Parliamentary paper. This sounds encouraging; but we are afraid the conditions under which the men have been recruited can scarcely be regarded as normal. During the twelve months covered by the report the number of recruits raised for the Regular Army amounted to 42,700, and for the Militia to 40,653. These figures compare very favourably with the statistics of former years, but they seem mainly attributable to the war fever that swept over the country during the concluding three months of the year. Last January twelvemonth was, it is true, an exceptionally good month, no less than 4,854 men being finally approved for the Regular Army, while February also showed a slight increase on the corresponding month of the preceding year. But a change then set in, which the Inspector-General attributes to the increasing demand for labour and the exceptionally flourishing state of trade. For the next seven months recruiting fell off seriously both for the Regular and Auxiliary force, while the percentage of recruits enlisted under standard materially increased. Consequently, and in spite of the favourable commencement, the number of men enlisting in the first three quarters of the year showed a considerable diminution as compared with the same period of 1898. This, it must be confessed, is not very satisfactory, but we are glad to note that, though the marked improvement that set in in the last quarter is largely attributed to the war in South Africa, it would seem to have been also in part due to the better system of recruiting which was introduced in April. But even so, the figures cannot be regarded as entirely satisfactory, and we trust the War Office will give ear to the suggestion of the Inspector-General of Recruiting in the matter of developing the employment for discharged soldiers and improving the recruiting houses so as to tempt a better class of men to join the colours. There is undoubtedly much to be said against the practice too often adopted of placing recruiting-houses in the lowest and most squalid parts of towns. Meanwhile the change that has been made in the direction of decentralising recruiting from the War Office has met with the unanimous approval of the General Officers concerned, and the wisdom of the step, too, has been amply justified by results, for by the end of the year no less than forty-six Militia infantry units had been embodied and their permanent staff withdrawn from recruiting. The permission given to exhibit recruiting posters outside post-offices has, we note, been largely made use of, and applications are now being made to the Chief Constables throughout the kingdom to authorise the exhibition of posters outside the rural police-offices. In conclusion, the Inspector-General points out that though it is easy enough to procure men for the colours when there is a chance of active service, it is not so easy to find sufficient number when there is no such prospect before them. He thinks the only solution for this is the assurance of work for the soldiers when they leave the colours, and the hope is expressed that General Officers will interest themselves in this valuable work by exerting their influence in the districts under their command.

Among the many lessons to be learnt from the operations in South Africa, there is none more impressive than the confirmation afforded to the time-honoured doctrine that the gun is the governing factor in all questions of artillery organization, and that the power of artillery is essentially a question of suitable armament, its personnel and methods of locomotion, however important, being accessory considerations. The paramount object is to have the right gun in the right place at the right time. The questions of artillery being out-classed and out-matched are distinct issues, which are only too apt to be confused. Field armies are organised essentially for warfare in the open, and to be as strong as possible for the chance encounter and pitched battle, which are always prominent features in every war. For this purpose, the destruction of personnel is the paramount object, and resolves itself into the power, as regards both infantry and artillery, of discharging the maximum of leaden bullets. This has led to the adoption of shrapnel for field artillery, the effects of which—being produced by half-ounce leaden bullets—analogous to musketry fire. When, however, one of the opposing forces deliberately takes up a position and entrenches itself, it becomes impervious to lead and unapproachable by the arme blanche. If it can be manoeuvred out of the position by a skilful use of a greatly superior force the conditions of field warfare again apply, but otherwise there is necessarily a deadlock, and the opposing field armies become, for the time being, siege and garrison forces. It will thus be seen that a General is seriously handicapped who is obliged to take over a situation which may be described as "heavily mortgaged" at the outset. An explosive shell, effective against entrenched troops, then becomes a necessity, involving, practically, a different species of gun. To a certain extent the field howitzer fulfils this purpose, but if the enemy possesses long-range high-velocity weapons with a heavy explosive shell these must be met with similar weapons.

When it became evident that Sir G. White would be invested at Ladysmith, the Navy, foreseeing the obvious needs of the Army, improvised the required materiel with excellent results, the weapons provided being equal to any that the enemy were likely to be able to employ. The principal lesson of the civilised warfare of the last half-century is the remarkable number of instances of the rapid transition of field armies into siege and garrison forces, and the decisive consequences of this result of modern warfare. In the Crimea our field army almost immediately became a siege army, and the siege train the dominant artillery factor. In the Franco-German War part of the Crown Prince's army became a siege army before Strasburg, being supplemented by a siege train. The investment of Metz, Sedan, and Paris afford similar instances, though the course of events at Sedan was so rapid that the field artillery sufficed. Plevna is a most remarkable instance, the disposition of the artillery under the directing genius of Todleben being a masterpiece of modern generalship. It is also evident that a relieved garrison may be required for the purposes of a field army. In a war in Europe a telegram and a short railway journey ordinarily suffice to bring the heavier form of artillery on the scene, but the frontier of a Continental belligerent is, as a rule, relatively closer to the scene of action than our maritime base in the theatre of war. From the above considerations it follows that the part which the artillery is likely to be called upon to play in a British campaign requires to be exhaustively considered as an armament question, ammunition supply included, with regard to every factor bearing on the plan of campaign and provision made beforehand, and that the responsible authority should possess the same control over artillery materiel in all its stages of provision and supply, as is recognised in the case of the Navy and its materiel and dockyards. The old Ordnance motto, Sua tela tonanti, was no meaningless phrase.

The Intelligence Department of the Army has been often attacked in the public press on account of its assumed want of knowledge of prevailing conditions in the South African Republics, and a certain want of prevision. It is, therefore, interesting to find in the Edinburgh Review, a defence of a military branch which cannot publicly defend itself. Seldom, says the Reviewer, have the resources of an enemy been better known to his opponents before the outbreak of the war than—thanks to Sir John Ardagh and the Intelligence Department—were those of the Boers to British statesmen and soldiers. "What was under-estimated in all forecasts was the fighting capacity of the Boer himself. We knew all about his arms and his armaments, and his country and our country; but after all this, in spite of all the changes introduced into modern warfare, national strength depends upon the character and quality of the men who wield the arms and the spirit that moves them, and in the Boers we have found an enemy, not, indeed, forming a drilled and highly-disciplined army, but which, indeed, is a veritable nation in arms, animated with the passionate belief that it is fighting for its national existence and independence. A large and difficult country, inhabited by men such as these, all history tells us, is not easily conquered." This view seems just, and there can be no doubt that we have not been altogether so ill-formed as to the preparations of the Boers as has been supposed, though there has been a certain failure to take steps to meet them.

With the arrival of the Powerful at Portsmouth England has welcomed the advance guard of her South African heroes. True, many officers and men have come home wounded, but the Naval Brigade has won everlasting renown for the part it played in the four months' defence of Ladysmith. All the courage and endurance in the world could not have saved the town from surrender had not the energy and resourcefulness of Captain Scott and Captain Lambton provided it with powerful guns from their ships in Durban harbour. So admirably had the enemy mounted every commanding position in the vicinity with heavy artillery that the Army guns were hopelessly outranged. At Graspan and Enslin the Naval Brigade displayed such conspicuous gallantry as to have been honoured by a congratulatory message from Her Majesty. Indeed, save only for the defence of Mafeking and the surrender of Cronje, the Naval incidents of the war have touched the imagination of the Empire more than any military event, with the exception, perhaps, of the splendid conduct of our Colonial troops. Hence the enthusiasm with which Portsmouth received Captain Lambton and the Naval Brigade has been echoed everywhere in the Queen's Dominions. There is room for regret only in the fact that Captain Scott, of the Terrible, is on his way to China, and his countrymen are, therefore, for the present debarred from giving him a right royal welcome. Not that it is anything new for the Navy to play a significant part in purely land operations. In the Soudan, Benin, Ashanti, Zululand, the Cape, the Crimea, India, and China, it has lent valuable assistance to our Generals in the field. Only a year or two ago Admiral Noel settled the Cretan business when it had baffled the wisdom of the European concert for months. On the present occasion, however, the Navy may be said to have excelled all previous performances on land, as it is nowhere denied that its guns saved the situation at Ladysmith.

The Bushmen Contingent raised for service in South Africa, is one of the most interesting experiments of the war. All the other colonial contingents are formed of men who have received some military training, inasmuch as they belong to permanent forces or to volunteer regiments. The Bushmen's first experience of military drill and discipline followed their enrolment in the service of the Imperial Government. Nevertheless they have qualities which more than compensate for their lack of soldierly training, and it is these which have recommended them to the War Office. They are the best riders in the world, the cow-boys of the plains not accepted. Their horses are as hardy as themselves, and can travel distances which are little short of marvellous. They can pick up a track on plain or hill-side, where these to an English regular would be a blank. They never lose themselves, and what is more, they are never afraid that it will happen. As for fatigue, they are patient of it to a degree that even a Boer might envy. They can cheerfully subsist on the coarsest food, and very little of that. Their hearing, sight, and eye for scouting, are surpassed only by the Kaffir and Red Indian. Lithe, sinewy, and active, they are the ideal scout. As riflemen, however, they are inferior to the Boers. In the first place, game is not so plentiful in Australia as it is in South Africa, in the second place, the Colonies, unlike the Republics, do not regard a military training, in which rifle practice takes first place, as a national necessity. No doubt every man in the Bushmen Contingent is a fair shot, but the average is not as high as it might have been with a different military ideal. Fortunately for the work they are engaged to perform on the Rhodesian frontier, their other qualifications could not be bettered. If they are not soldiers they are splendid raw material.

There is a special interest in the interview with Sultan Mohammed Khan, published in the Daily Mail a few days ago. With wild rumours of a movement on Herat as a result of our refusal to consider Russian intervention in South Africa, and probable reports of Muscovite railway extension in Central Asia flying about, the remarks of a well-known figure in Afghanistan and an official high in the Ameer's confidence, are illuminating. He points out that people in England sometimes talk as if the Capture of Herat was an easy task, though after the defence of Ladysmith, Kimberley, and Mafeking, they will doubtless adopt another strain, whereas it would be an achievement of the greatest magnitude. In his opinion it would require an army of half a million of men — an estimate none too extravagant when one remembers the awful loss of life before the trenches of Plevna. For Herat is fortified with the finest modern ordnance; it is distant from a Russian base of supplies; it has 30,000 splendidly armed men to defend it, and 50,000 more within easy call; the Government of Afghanistan is in every sense stronger than the Government of Turkey. It is reassuring, also, to understand that England, which is always being surprised somewhere or other, has a good watchdog on her most vulnerable frontier. Afghanistan, says Sultan Mohammed Khan, has a thoroughly wide-awake Intelligence Department, and agents scattered over the whole of Central Asia. Hence she can never be taken by surprise. Moreover, he tells us that Afghanistan clearly appreciates the difference between England and Russia in Asia. The one aims at developing her power within her present boundaries; the other aims at absorbing all the territory to the south of her. The contrast is striking enough in all conscience. Nevertheless, it has not impressed itself on a large party in England, and there was a doubt until recently whether it had impressed itself on the Afghans themselves. Fortunately, the utterances and policy of the Ameer make it abundantly clear that he at least recognises the identity of his interests with ours.

Several correspondents in the daily papers have brought a serious charge against the War Office and what they call the "old staff in South Africa," viz., "that when the war broke out we were entirely ignorant that horse sickness prevails in South Africa during certain periods of the year." The ignorance really is on the part of those who thus write without knowledge, for, as a matter of fact, the War Office took steps two years ago, on the strong recommendation of "the old staff," to fathom the mysteries of this horse sickness by sending out an eminent expert to report on the subject. Unfortunately, the officer referred to was locked up in Ladysmith during the siege; but, so far as those in authority are concerned, everything that it has been possible to do has been done to ascertain the causes of the disease, and the local military authorities deserve the greatest credit for all they did before the war came to assist the War Office in the prosecution of its inquiry, and with the best results so far as the horses of the permanent garrison were concerned, as official statistics show conclusively. The war came before the inquiry could be brought to an end; but the writers in the dailies who have so recklessly preferred charges of "gross neglect" against the War Office and the "old staff in South Africa" have done a cruel injustice to both.

An attempted appreciation of the situation in the Orange State, taken from the France Militaire, may serve to illustrate how, with the smallest basis of truth, the French Press — and they are not alone on the Continent in this respect — contrive utterly to misrepresent our position and mislead the public: — "Lord Roberts, reduced at Bloemfontein to the defensive, finds himself in a most critical situation. He is in a case of extreme want, the provisions scarcely suffice, and at the opening of the winter season the troops are suffering from the want of tents and clothing. The horses are tried still more than the men, and it may be affirmed, without exaggeration, that the cavalry has exhausted its strength. Three weeks ago we censured, and were alone in being of that opinion, the inopportune and premature occupation of Bloemfontein. Such a movement as he has made is doubtless one of the most fruitful methods of strategy — the equivalent of a change of base — but a good line of communications should have been secured, and the troops should not have lowered their heads to run blindly against the adversary without care having been taken beforehand for the proper working of the services in the rear. Kitchener will pay dearly for his error." One would expect a military journal to be better posted than this.

An interesting personality has passed away in Mr. Alonzo Money, one of the administrators of the Caisse of the Public Debt, at Cairo, where he has been living for many years. He was engaged in the discharge of various high offices in the time of the Condominium in connection with the British interests and subsequently. He had previously held various posts in India, and was a excellent specimen of the Harleybury-bred official of the olden school.

The lists of the officers and men who are dying of enteric fever and dysentery in our camps and hospitals in South Africa afford painful evidence of the tenacity which these scourges cling to us, from the time of the outbreak at Ladysmith. The death of Captain Meeking, 10th Hussars, will cause widespread regret to many friends in Irish hunting fields, a kind, amiable gentleman, whose first experience of active service in a rude campaign was too much for his constitution.

An officer "of fame and service" writes: — "Of course I cannot know the cause of Colonel Crofton's retirement, but I must say that he was a man whose zeal, aptitude, and extraordinary quickness in action and grasp of detail, which I had many opportunities of observing while we were together on service, would have recommended him to me had I been in the field in command at present. I do not think his request for reinforcements at Spion Kop could be ground for shunting him."

The Secretary of State for War has decided that the terms of the Pay Warrant, which provide that the effective pay of a re-employed officer who has retired with a gratuity shall be reduced by a deduction equivalent to the actuarial annual value of the gratuity, shall not be enforced in the case of officers re-employed on active service or in connection with the South African war.

From what we gather, the home authorities take a proper and reasonable view with regard to the Spion Kop despatches, and are not disposed to adopt extreme measures. It is a decision which every thoughtful soldier will approve. It is all very well to blame generals in the field for the failure of their plans, but some allowances have to be made for them when they are operating in a most difficult country, without proper maps, and without adequate material. The policy of "he has failed, down with him," is all well and good, but it can be carried too far.

Competitors requiring registers for the Army Sixty Competition should apply to the Secretary, Captain J. G. Mayne, The Gables, Ipswich, enclosing — cers 5s., other ranks, 2s. 6d.

Plans have been prepared for a new rifle range at Lincoln, to cost about £2,000. Half of the amount, it is expected, will be furnished by the War Office, and the remainder by the City of Lincoln. Since the old range was closed the three Lincoln companies of Volunteers have had no facilities for target practice nearer than Grantham, and the training of the Militia has also been removed from Lincoln.

A meeting of the Committee of the Royal Naval Fund was held on Wednesday at the offices, 9, Craig's Court, S.W., to consider applications for grants to widows and dependent relatives of seamen and Marines. There were present: — Admiral Sir George Willes (in the chair), Major-Gen. C. H. Scafe, R.M., Major-Gen. W. P. Wright, R.M., Mr. G. T. Lambert, C.B., Mr. J. Gordon Langton, Major W. M. Mackenzie, Lieut. Gerald R. Maltby, R.N., and Mr. John Rice, R.N.

Arrangements are in progress for constituting a new First Army Corps for home defence, Regular, Royal Reserve, and Militia battalions being included. The Regular battalions selected are understood to be the 1st Grenadier Guards at Windsor, the 1st Royal Lancaster, and 2nd Highland Light Infantry, lately on service at Singapore and Ceylon, and the 3rd Worcestershire and 3rd Manchester, newly-formed battalions; those of the Royal Reserve will be the two Northern and two Home Counties battalions, while among the Militia chosen are the 3rd Royal Irish, 3rd Cheshire, 4th South Wales Borderers, 3rd Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, 3rd Hampshire, 3rd Derbyshire, 4th Durham Light Infantry, 3rd Gordon Highlanders, and 6th Royal Irish Rifles.

Those Indian native infantry regiments, which form a portion of the field army, first for mobilization, are to be re-armed with the magazine rifle immediately. These are the 2nd Bengal Infantry and 35th Sikhs at Dera Ismail Khan, 14th Sikhs at Nowshera, 23rd Pioneers at Mian Mir, 31st Punjab Infantry at Sialkot, 34th Pioneers at Umballa, 36th Sikhs at Rawul Pindi, 37th Dogras at Peshawur, 38th Dogras at Ferozepoor, 1st Batn., 5th Goorkhas, at Abbottabad, 2nd Batn., 4th Goorkhas at Bakloh, 2nd Batn., 1st Goorkhas, at Dharmasala, 2nd Punjab Batn., Infantry with the Kokat-Kurram Force, 19th and 26th Bombay Infantry at Hyderabad (Sind) and Quetta, 28th Bombay Pioneers at Kirki, 3rd Baluchis at Chaman, 3rd Madras Infantry at Secunderabad, and some companies of sappers.

The Queen's birthday will be celebrated in London alone on Wednesday, May 23, and at all other stations on Thursday, the 24th.

The Prince of Wales and the Duke of York will attend the banquet to be held under the auspices of the British Empire League on Monday, the 30th inst., at 8 p.m., at the Hotel Cecil, in recognition of the services rendered by the Colonial troops in the South African War, and to welcome the presence in this country of the delegates from Australia. Among the guests will be Lord Salisbury, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Wolseley, Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., and Colonel G. T. Denison (president of the British Empire League in Canada).

The British Consul-General for Algeria writing to correct an error in the account which appeared in some newspapers of the military honours accorded to the late Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart by the French authorities, adds:—

"I should like to take this opportunity of saying how deeply touched Lady Stewart and the family of the late Field-Marshal, as also the whole British colony at Algiers, were at the very great courtesy shown by all the French authorities, especially in giving military honours a second time on the occasion of the transfer of the body from the English Church to the man-of-war. There was nothing more impressive during the whole ceremony than when that fine old soldier, General Grisot, commanding the 19th Army Corps, stepped forward and stood at the salute while the band played 'Aux Champs,' and the body was slowly lowered into the Admiral's barge, after which he turned and gave the order to play 'God Save the Queen.'"

The colonelcy of the 2nd Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, vacant by the death of General H. Renny, C.S.I., has been absorbed. It was on July 1, 1881, that the amalgamation of the regiment was carried out. It has thus taken upwards of nineteen years to dispose of the whole of the second colonels, General Renny being the last. General Sir Robert T. Farren now becomes Colonel of the old 47th-81st. He was appointed to the colonelcy of the former, his old regiment, September 14, 1885.

The appointment of General Sir Henry Brackenbury as Director-General of Ordnance at the War Office would seem to have been fully justified by the experiences of the present war. Reuter's correspondent writes from Cape Town:—

The military officers here highly eulogise the work of the Ordnance Department. Though provision was originally made for 50,000 men only, the requirements of a force now exceeding 200,000, including 30,000 irregulars, are promptly met. This fact reflects great credit on Sir Henry Brackenbury, Director-General of Ordnance, who has promptly responded to the unprecedented demand for supplies of every description made by the officers of the Department here.

Lieut.-General Sir George White arrived at Southampton on Saturday last, when he received an enthusiastic reception. He was received on landing by the Mayor (Mr. Alderman Hussey) and a large number of the aldermen and councillors, all in their robes of office, the Town Clerk, the Recorder, and the Sheriff, with silver-tipped wand. Lady White, accompanied by her daughter; Colonel the Hon. G. Crichton and Lady Emma Crichton; Lord Northbrook, Sir Walter Peace, Agent-General for Natal; Colonel Woods, Hampshire Yeomanry; Captain Graham White, R.N.; Captain Wiseley (representing Sir Donald Currie, who is in the South of France), and Colonel Stacpole. A guard of honour of the 2nd V.B. Hampshire Regiment with the band of the regiment. In reply to a civic address of welcome, Sir George White said:—

Mr. Mayor, Aldermen, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I return you my very earnest and sincere thanks for the reception you have accorded me to-day, and to you especially, Mr. Mayor, for the all-too flattering words which have been conveyed in your address, but I accept them not only for myself, but also, and more, for the garrison which I had the honour to command—(loud cheers)—for every officer and man in it, from my chivalrous and gallant second in command, a name so well known and honoured, Sir Archibald Hunter, to the young trumpeter of the 5th Lancers—(cheers)—who behaved with such gallantry at the action of Elands-laagte. I am also deeply indebted to the distinguished company I see around me for the countenance which their presence here gives to our troops, whom they, at all events, believe to have done good work. (Cheers.) It is to tributes such as these that the rank and file look, perhaps, for their greatest reward after four months of hard work, done under constant exposure to violent extremes of weather, without any shelter, and under the constant fire of the enemy's guns. It is to the rank and file that these tributes appeal with the greatest force, and for my own part I value them most on that account. When messages of sympathy and congratulation came from our Queen—God bless her!—(loud cheers)—and our countrymen they were posted in prominent places in and about Ladysmith, and it was a joy to see with what pleasure they were read and re-read by our men. Yes, and even copies were made to be despatched to England as soon as our comrades under the gallant Sir Redvers Buller—(loud cheers)—had cleared the way for them to be sent across the seas. But, ladies and gentlemen, this is scarcely the occasion for me to make a long speech. There is a great deal I should like to say: to give you incidents of the siege which would show you how worthy is the countenance which you are bestowing on the gallant garrison of Ladysmith and all ranks and classes in that town. I will not detain you longer, Mr. Mayor. (Cries of "Go on.") I am afraid I have nothing more to say without going into the question of the siege operations at great length, which I do not think it suitable to do to-day. Though I have been congratulated on my appearance, which is a great deal due to the healthy blow up Southampton Water, I do not feel in a condition to make a long speech, but again I thank you.

General White, who was accompanied by Lady White, visited Egham on Wednesday, where he was presented by the vicar, on behalf of the inhabitants, with an address of welcome. He delivered in acknowledgment a genial speech, in which he thanked them very earnestly for their kind words. Such appreciations of their efforts to do their duty were, he said, the best rewards that soldiers could look for. He must take exception to one statement in the address—that at one time the garrison of Ladysmith were without hope, or nearly so. They were never without hope, for they knew they had a good man at their back in John Bull, and that, though he might sometimes sleep, he generally came up before it was too late.

Sir George White has accepted an invitation from the Ulster Association in London to a dinner and presentation at the Hotel Cecil, which will take place next month. The association sent a message, to be handed to Sir George at Madeira, on his passage homewards:—"The Ulster Association in London request pleasure of your company to dinner and presentation. Kindly consent." To this the General replied:—"Accept with pleasure." Although it is not yet decided what form the presentation will take, Ulstermen and others interested are requested to forward subscriptions to the honorary secretary, 29, Cannon Street, E.C.

"Major-General the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton," the special correspondent of the Times wrote on March 23 from Ladysmith, "has left here for Colenso. He was given, on the return of General Clery, the command of a division of troops composed of the garrison, his Brigadiers being Colonels Kitchener and Howard. Sir Archibald Hunter's division is composed of the 5th and 6th Brigades. General Clery takes command of the division now at Sunday's River that was General Lyttelton's."

Major-General W. A. Lawrence, I.S.C., has succeeded to colonel's allowances.

It has been decided that it is not necessary for an officer who holds the temporary rank of Major-General in South Africa to vacate his position on the list of Aides-de-Camp to the Queen. No steps therefore are being taken to appoint successors to Major-Generals J. P. Brabazon, C.B., E. T. H. Hutton, C.B., F. Howard, C.B., R. A. F. Clements, D.S.O., C. W. H. Douglas, and H. A. MacDonald, C.B., all of whom are in command of brigades in the field.

Mr. A. Higgins has been appointed Deputy Accountant-General of the Army, vice Mr. T. Cave-Browne-Cave, retired under the age rule. Mr. H. de la Bère succeeds Mr. Higgins as an Assistant Accountant-General. Mr. Higgins joined the War Office shortly after the Crimean War. He is an antiquarian, and well known in literary and scientific circles. He was for some years editor of the Army List. Mr. de la Bère joined the Inland Revenue Department in 1881 as an Assistant Surveyor of Taxes, and was at one time Director of the Royal Army Clothing Factory at Pimlico. Messrs. A. H. B. Allen, J. B. Crosland, H. G. Goligher, and L. D. Holland have been appointed by Lord Lansdowne Assistant Principals at the War Office.

Colonel E. J. Courtenay will complete his extended term as A.A.G., Headquarters, Ireland, on Saturday next. His appointment has been extended for a further period of three months, i.e., until July 28.

Colonel H. Gunter, lately commanding the local forces, Queensland, succeeds Colonel R. C. Hare, transferred to Brecon, in command of the 63rd Regimental District, Ashton-under-Lyne.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. McCallum, R.E., Governor of Newfoundland, has arrived home on leave.

Major L. Darwin, Reserve of Officers, has been appointed D.A.A.G. for Military Intelligence, headquarters.

Major A. B. Dunsterville, 1st Batn. East Surrey Regiment, has been appointed D.A.A.G. Bengal establishment, vice Major C. F. G. Young, I.S.C., whose five years expired on the 1st inst.

Major the Hon. C. E. Walsh, half pay, late Rifle Brigade, has been appointed Recruiting Staff Officer, Class III., for duty at St. George's Barracks, London.

Major H. A. Ravenshaw, I.S.C. (second in command 26th Punjab Infantry), is about to retire with effect from the 4th inst.

Sir Matthew White Ridley has selected Major B. W. Cracraft, I.S.C., now on leave at home, as Deputy Governor in Her Majesty's Prison service.

Major G. P. Braisier-Creagh, I.S.C., having arrived in South Africa, has been appointed to the command of Roberts's Horse.

Major the Hon. A. Hay, Lieutenant Sir R. Bell Blois, and 2nd Lieutenant D. Palmer, have taken up duty with the Royal Guards Reserve Battalion.

Captain Lord Brackley, 3rd Batn. Royal Scots, has joined Sir Frederick Carrington's staff in South Africa as a special service officer.

Captain M. W. K. Connolly, 1st Batn. King's Own Light Infantry, has been appointed Adjutant of the 2nd V.B. Royal Warwickshire Regiment, which became vacant by the retirement of Major G. G. Tarry, Leicestershire Regiment, now appointed to a Chief Constabulary.

Captain R. Alexander, 7th Batn. Rifle Brigade, has been appointed an Assistant-Inspector, Gold Coast Constabulary.

Messrs. Bewlay and Co. of the Strand, have not advanced the prices of their cigars and tobaccos in consequence of the War Tax.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, April 14.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Carrington and staff sailed for Beira in the Aurora with the Bushmen and Scotch scouts.

Commandant Cronje, his wife, and three members of the staff landed at St. Helena at 11 o'clock, accompanied by Col. Reeve. They were received by Mr. Sterndale, the Governor, and Mrs. Sterndale at the Castle, where the party stayed an hour, afterwards proceeding to Kent Cottage. There was no demonstration.

The American Consul is stated to have received six and a half tons of presents for the British military prisoners, mostly from England and the Cape. They comprise luxuries, groceries, cigars, cigarettes, and beds for the hospital. They were admitted duty free by the Transvaal, and every facility was afforded to Mr. Hay for delivering them, a fact which greatly gratified him. The American Consul visited the prisoners at Waterval, and says he found everything there as satisfactory as could be expected in the circumstances.

The Canadian Artillery and Mounted Rifles, Western Australians, and Derbyshire Yeomanry, under the command of Col. Drury, arrived during the morning at De Aar. They were detached from the main body of the Carnarvon Field Force, under the command of Col. Parsons, which left Victoria Road nearly five weeks ago, and marched to Kenhardt and thence here, a distance of over 500 miles. This was covered in many adverse circumstances, including heavy roads, the result of unprecedented rains, and difficulties in obtaining supplies. The troops encountered no active opposition, but pacified a large district which was previously in an active state of rebellion and dispersed or arrested the ring-leaders. Their conduct is said to have been "beyond all praise, the men having shown the best spirit as soldiers of the Queen."

Lieut. Findlay and Corpl. Neal, of the New Zealanders, had a narrow escape from drowning while crossing the Hartbeestee River to-day. They were gallantly rescued when completely exhausted by Sergt. Street and Pte. Cassidy, of the same contingent. Pte. Cassidy has been promoted to the rank of sergeant and recommended for the Royal Humane Society's medal. He is now sick in hospital at Carnarvon. After getting Lieut. Findlay on his horse he was washed away, and he then swam ashore with the lieutenant, both being in full marching dress. "It was a most heroic bit of work," the telegram says, "and deserves special recognition."

Sunday, April 15.

Col. Schiel, with two other Boer prisoners, was landed at St. Helena at 2 p.m., and sent to High Knoll Citadel in consequence of a daring attempt to escape made last night. It appears that Col. Schiel yesterday bribed a boatman to take a letter to the Dutch cruiser in the roadstead. This letter was taken to the Niobe in mistake and the prisoners' design came to the knowledge of the authorities. Late last night Col. Schiel, with the two other prisoners, attempted to leave the vessel in which they were confined, but the attempt was, of course, frustrated. Col. Schiel was found to be in possession of a large knife. When he landed this afternoon he was calmly smoking a cigar. He refused to ride in a carriage, saying that he preferred walking. The ordinary guard accompanied the prisoner to Ladder Hill, where they were relieved by the Royal Artillery Guard, who took the officer to High Knoll Citadel.

Gen. Brabant, with a mounted force, reoccupied Rouxville to-day. Except for ineffective sniping no resistance was offered.

Monday, April 16.

Lord Roberts is stated to have remonstrated concerning the treatment of colonial officers now prisoners at Pretoria. He complains that they are treated as criminals and confined in gaol. Ninety cases of enteric fever and dysentery have occurred among the prisoners at Waterval, and yet the Transvaal Government has failed to supply on the demand of the doctor the necessary medicines and medical comforts. The prisoners, Lord Roberts further complains, are forced to bivouac on the open veldt, and the sick are placed in an open shed with an iron roof only. It was only when the new doctor threatened to resign that medicines and mattresses were supplied. Lord Roberts invites President Kruger to remedy this state of things, and contrasts with it the treatment of the Boer prisoners, sick and wounded, who receive the same care as our own soldiers.

Wednesday, April 18.

Telegrams from Mafeking published by the Morning Post. Major Baillie, in a despatch dated April 11, said:—"All is well. The town was shelled on the 5th and 6th, and the bombardment was continued on the 7th. Lieut. Smithman returned successfully on the 7th. Col. Plumer's column on the 7th. The Boers make continued efforts to 'lift' cattle, but they are not successful. Capt. McLaren, who was wounded severely, is doing well."

According to a telegram from the special correspondent of the Times at Bloemfontein, published to-day, a considerable change has been made in the organisation of the horse artillery. Major King's scheme for increasing their mobility has been adopted, and now each battery will move with a spare team to each gun and with only three waggons. The cavalry brigade artillery organisation will be one horse battery and a section of lin. Maxims each. The Mounted Infantry Brigade will have one horse battery and two sections of lin. Maxims attached. The Cavalry Division Corps Artillery will consist of two horse batteries and a brigade division of howitzer batteries.

British officers stated to have arrived at Pretoria from Dewetsdorp:—Capt. McWhinnie, Spicer, Kelly, and Tennant; Lieuts. Southey, Saunders, Colthurst, Butler; a Press correspondent, Lord Rosslyn, and seventy other prisoners.

Two additional companies of the mounted section of the City Imperial Volunteers arrived at Bloemfontein, others being ordered up. A detachment of the same corps, at Karree Siding, stated to be doing good work, and having an occasional interchange of shots with the Boers.

Thursday, April 19.

No news of importance came to hand.

Friday, April 20.

Telegrams received to-day state that fighting has taken place at Karree Siding, to the north of Bloemfontein. The fighting does not, however, appear to be of an important character. It is stated that everything is now ready for a British advance. It should be noted that Lord Kitchener has returned to Bloemfontein, and that Sir Archibald Hunter is also paying a visit to the Free State capital. Correspondents aver that sufficient remounts have reached Lord Roberts. The cavalry is declared to be ready to move. The censorship restrictions have been temporarily greatly increased owing to the movements of troops.

The Highland Brigade is now at its full strength. The whole of the drafts, both of Regulars and Volunteers, have arrived.

The telegraph line between Ladygrey and Aliwal North has been cut. Gen. Brabant has arrested De Beer, the Boer Landdrost of Rouxville, and Hoffmann, a former Landdrost.

According to Boer reports, the number of Boers at Wepener is from 8,000 to 10,000, with 15 guns. The fight continues. They say that the British will be compelled to surrender. A splendid stand is being made, and Lord Roberts promises early relief.

It is stated that Col. Baden-Powell has been desired to hold out at Mafeking until May 20.

There appears to be every evidence that the Boers intend making their last stand on the lines reaching from Lydenberg along the mountains into Swaziland. A traveller who has recently arrived here states that that Transvaalers are working with great energy, persuading the Swazis that the British cause is a lost one, and endeavouring to ingratiate themselves by every means in their power, hoping thereby to secure a foothold in Swaziland on peaceable terms in order to facilitate their ultimate intention to seize and hold the country. It would at present be impossible for them to take possession by force owing to the risk of complications among the inhabitants.

Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton, C.B., has entered upon his command of the division of Mounted Infantry in South Africa, with two brigades under Cols. Hutton and Ridley as Brigadier-Generals. Gen. Hutton's brigade comprises the Canadians, the New Zealanders, and all the Australians except the cavalry. The staff is:—Cols. Martyr, chief staff officer; Lord Rosmead, A.D.C.; Col. Hoad, Victoria, A.D.C.; Major Bridges, New South Wales, and Major Cartwright, Canada, D.A.A.G.'s; Col. Gordon, Adelaide, officer on the line of communication; Major Rankin, Queensland, staff officer; Major Vandeleur, Scots Guards, advanced base transport officer. The brigade consists of four corps of mounted infantry, under Cols. Alderson, De Lisle, Pilcher, and Henry. The first corps consists of a first battalion of Canadians under Col. Lessard, a second battalion under Col. Herchner, and Strathcona's Horse under Col. Steel. The second corps consists of the New South Wales Mounted Infantry under Col. Knight, and the West Australians under Capt. Moor. The third corps is formed of the Queenslanders under Col. Ricardo, and the New Zealanders under Major Robin. The fourth corps consists of the Victorians under Col. Price, the South Australians under Capt. Reade, and the Tasmanians under Capt. Cameron. Each corps has a battalion of Imperial Mounted Infantry attached to it except the New South Wales corps. A battery will join the division, as well as the Canadian battery and a number of Vickers-Maxims. The New South Wales Army Medical Corps, under Col. Williams, are the medical troops for the division. General Ridley's brigade consists entirely of South African troops.

Number of British troops landed or on the point of landing in South Africa:—

	Men.	Horses.	Guns.
Sailed down to the end of February ...	141,165	24,103	379
Sailed during March ...	9,277	2,222	7
Total from England ...	150,442	26,325	386
Additional troops from the Colonies, &c., estimated ...	56,000	28,000	223
Grand total ...	206,442	54,325	609

Of the guns, 456 are field guns and 153 machine guns, and in addition to the horses enumerated above, 10,000 and 25,000 mules have been imported from abroad.

The Mansion House War Fund has reached the sum of £881,200.

ROYAL RESERVE AND MILITIA.

TRAINING REGULATIONS.

Sir Evelyn Wood, Adjutant-General to the Forces, has issued special instructions of an important nature for the future training of the recently-formed Royal Reserve Battalions and of the Militia, whose embodiment will be completed early next month.

The instructions state that their purpose as regards the Royal Reserve is to ensure training on a uniform system so that the force may take the field at the shortest possible notice. To the same end the Militia training is to be devoted chiefly to secure musketry and field efficiency. As regards the Reserve Battalions the men must not be treated as recruits—full account is to be taken of their previous experience. They are to be drilled with their rifles, and not more than ten days are to introduce company drill. Then the commanding officer is to decide when battalion drill may be proceeded to, and in that stage the aim is to be the moving of the men from one point to another without confusion. To movements in extended order special attention is to be given, and the men are to be impressed with the fact that the advent of the magazine rifle makes all the difference between the conditions of warfare now and when they last served in the ranks. The new formations of Infantry scouts and a moving but very thin line of skirmishers, with their supports and reserves on the front and flanks of all formed bodies, even in broken ground, must be constantly practised, and further detailed instructions on this subject will be issued soon. The course of musketry for Reservists will be the same as that laid down in Table B for the Regular Forces, and special attention must be paid to fire discipline.

To improve the musketry efficiency of the Militia the embodied Infantry units will this year have the same allowance of ammunition, and will fire the same course as the Regulars, but the Commander-in-Chief relies on careful supervision and instruction and on the efforts of all ranks to secure the full benefit from this provision. To ensure increased efficiency in the field much attention is to be given to company training. Commanders of companies must devote special attention to training their officers and non-commissioned officers to act on their own initiative and to accept responsibility. Very little of the Militia's time is to be devoted to ceremonial drill.

For both Royal Reserve and Militia it is ordered that during company training shelter-trench exercises shall be frequently practised, and on the conclusion of the task the men will invariably fire five rounds "independent," it being explained to them that in this case "volleys" would not be effective. Where blank ammunition is used the manner in which the men take advantage of cover will be checked by an officer or non-commissioned officer placed several yards in front; and the manner in which the men adapt the firing position to the irregularities of the ground will be watched by the company instructor. The men must also be instructed in firing from behind cover of every description. It is on the thoroughness of the instruction and the results obtained, and not on accuracy of movement in drill evolutions, that the efficiency of units will be judged on the conclusion of the training.

SPION KOP DESPATCHES.

LORD ROBERTS' SEVERE CONDEMNATION.

The London Gazette on Tuesday night published the despatches of Sir Redvers Buller and Sir Charles Warren, describing the advance across the Tugela River on Jan. 17 and 18, and the capture and evacuation of the Spion Kop position on Jan. 23 and 24. Lord Roberts, in forwarding the despatches to the Secretary of State for War, severely criticises Sir Charles Warren, Col. Thorneycroft, and Gen. Buller. He says:—

"The plan of operations is not very clearly described in the despatches themselves, but it may be gathered from them and the accompanying documents themselves that the original intention was to cross the Tugela at or near Trichardt's Drift, and thence by following the road past 'Fair View' and 'Acton Home,' to gain the open plain north of Spion Kop, the Boer position in front of Potgieter's Drift being too strong to be taken by direct attack. The whole force, less one brigade, was placed under the orders of Sir Charles Warren, who, the day after he crossed the Tugela, seems to have consulted his General and principal staff officers, and to have come to the conclusion that the flanking movement which Sir Redvers Buller had mentioned in his secret instructions was impracticable on account of insufficiency of supplies. He accordingly decided to advance by the more direct road leading north-east and branching off from a point east of 'Three Tree Hill.' The selection of this road necessitated the capture and retention of Spion Kop, but whether it would have been equally necessary to occupy Spion Kop had the line of advance indicated by Sir Redvers Buller been followed is not stated in the correspondence. As Sir Charles Warren considered it impossible to make the wide flanking movement which was recommended, if not actually prescribed, in his secret instructions, he should at once have acquainted Sir Redvers Buller with the course of action which he proposed to adopt. There is nothing to show whether he did so or not, but it seems only fair to Sir Charles Warren to point out that Sir Redvers Buller appears throughout to have been aware of what was happening. On several occasions he was present during the operations. He repeatedly gave advice to his subordinate commander, and on the day after the withdrawal from Spion Kop he resumed the chief command.

"As regards the withdrawal of the troops from the Spion Kop position, which, though occupied almost without opposition in the early morning of Jan. 24, had to be held throughout the day under an extremely heavy fire, and the retention of which had become essential to the relief of Ladysmith, I regret that I am unable to concur with Sir Redvers Buller in thinking that Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft exercised a wise discretion in ordering the troops to retire. Even admitting that due preparations may not have been made for strengthening the position during the night, reorganising the defence, and bringing up artillery—in regard to which Sir Charles Warren's report does not altogether bear out Sir Redvers Buller's contention—admitting also that the senior officers on the summit of the hill might have been more promptly informed of the measures taken by Sir Charles Warren to support and reinforce them, I am of opinion that Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft's assumption of responsibility and authority was wholly inexcusable. During the night the enemy's fire, if it did not cease altogether, could not have been formidable, and, though lamp signalling was not possible at the time, owing to the supply of oil having failed, it would not have taken more than two or three hours at most for Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft to communicate by messenger with Major-Gen. Coke or Sir Charles Warren, and to receive a reply.

"Major-General Coke appears to have left Spion Kop at 9.30 p.m. for the purpose of consulting with Sir Charles Warren, and up to that hour the idea of a withdrawal had not been entertained. Yet almost immediately after Major-Gen. Coke's departure Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft issued an order, without reference to superior authority, which upset the whole plan of operations, and rendered unavailing the sacrifices which had already been made to carry it into effect. On the other hand, it is only right to state that Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft appears to have behaved in a very gallant manner throughout the day, and it was doubtless due in a great measure to his exertions and example that the troops continued to hold the summit of the hill until directed to retire. The conduct of Capt. Phillips, Brigade Major of the Tenth Brigade, on the occasion in question, is deserving of high commendation. He did his best to rectify the mistake which was being made; but it was too late. Signalling communication was not re-established until 2.30 a.m. on Jan. 25, and by that time the Naval guns could not have reached the summit of the hill before daybreak. Major-Gen. Coke did not return, and Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft had gone away. Moreover, most of the troops had begun to leave the hill, and the working parties, with the half company of the Royal Engineers, had also withdrawn.

"It is to be regretted that Sir Charles Warren did not himself visit Spion Kop during the afternoon or evening, knowing as he did that the state of affairs there was very critical, and that the loss of the position would involve the failure of the operations. He was, consequently, obliged to summon Major-Gen. Coke to his headquarters in the evening in order that he might ascertain how matters were going on, and the command of Spion Kop thus devolved on Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft; of Spion Kop was not aware of this. About midday, under instructions from Sir Redvers Buller, Sir Charles Warren had directed Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft to assume command on the summit of the hill, with the temporary rank of Brigadier-Gen., but this order was not communicated to Major-Gen. Coke, who, until he left the position at 9.30 p.m., was under the impression that the command had devolved on Col. Hill, as senior officer, after Col. Crofton had been wounded. Omissions or mistakes of this nature may be trivial in themselves, yet may exercise an important influence on the course of events; and I think that Sir Redvers Buller is justified in remarking that 'there was a want of organisation and system which acted most unfavourably on the defence.'

"The attempt to relieve Ladysmith, described in these despatches, was well devised, and I agree with Sir Redvers Buller in thinking that it ought to have succeeded. That it failed may, in some measure, be due to the difficulties of the ground and the commanding positions held by the enemy—probably also to errors of judgment and want of administrative capacity on the part of Sir Charles Warren. But whatever faults Sir Charles Warren may have committed, the failure must also be ascribed to the disinclination of the officer in supreme command to assert his authority and see that what he thought best was done, and also to the unwarrantable and needless assumption of responsibility by a subordinate officer. The gratifying feature in these despatches is the admirable behaviour of the troops throughout the operations."

GEN. BULLER'S REPORT.

In forwarding Sir C. Warren's report of the operations at Spion Kop, Sir Redvers Buller, in the course of his remarks says:—

"On the night of Jan. 23 Gen. Warren attacked Spion Kop, which operation he has made the subject of a special report. On the morning of the 25th, finding that Spion Kop had been abandoned in the night, I decided to withdraw Gen. Warren's force; the troops had been continuously engaged for a week in circumstances entailing considerable hardships; there had been very heavy losses on Spion Kop. I consequently assumed the command, commenced with the withdrawal of the ox and heavy mule transports on the 25th; this was completed by midday the 26th; by double spanning the loaded ox waggons got over the drift at the rate of about eight per hour. The mule waggons went over the pontoon bridge, but all the mules had to be taken out and the vehicles passed over by hand. For about seven hours of the night the drift could not be used, as it was dangerous in the dark, but the use of the pontoon went on day and night. In addition to machine guns, six batteries of Royal Field Artillery, and four howitzers, the following vehicles were passed:—Ox waggons, 282; ten-span mule waggons, 98; six-span, 107; four-span, 52; total, 489 vehicles. In addition to these, the ambulances were working backwards and forwards, evacuating the sick and wounded. By 2 p.m. the 26th, all the ox-waggons were over, and by 11.30 p.m. all the mule transports were across and the bridge clear for the troops. By 4 a.m. the 27th, all the troops were over, and by 8 a.m. the pontoons were gone, and all was clear. The troops had all reached their new camps by 10 a.m. The marches averaged for the mounted troops about seven miles, and for the infantry and artillery an average of five miles. Everything worked without a hitch, and the arrangements reflected great credit on the staff of all degrees; but I must especially mention Major Irwin, R.E., and his men of the Pontoon Troop, who were untiring. When all men were over, the chasses of the pontoon bridge were so worn by the traffic that I do not think that they would have lasted another half-hour. Thus ended another expedition which, I think, ought to have succeeded. We have suffered very heavy losses, and lost many whom we can ill spare; but, on the other hand, we have inflicted as great or greater losses upon the enemy than they have upon us, and they are, by all accounts, thoroughly disheartened; while our troops are, I am glad and proud to say, in excellent fettle."

SIR C. WARREN'S ACCOUNT.

Sir C. Warren, in a detailed account of the operations, speaks of the secret instructions he received from Gen. Buller, and the efforts he made to carry them out. After pointing out the difficulties of the situation, he remarks that on the evening of Jan. 19:—

"After having examined the possible roads by which we could proceed, I assembled the General Officers and Staff, and the Officer commanding Royal Artillery, and commanding Royal Engineers, and pointed out to them that of the two roads by which we could advance, the eastern one by Acton Homes must be rejected, because time would not allow of it, and with this all concurred. I then pointed out that the only possible way of all getting through by the road north of Fair View would be by taking three or four days' food in our haversacks, and sending all our waggons back across the Tugela; but before we could do this we must capture the position in front of us. On the following day, January 20, I placed two brigades and six batteries of artillery at the disposal of Gen. Sir C. F. Clery, with instructions to attack the Boer positions by a series of outflanking movements, and by the end of the day, after fighting for twelve hours, we were in possession of the whole part of the hills, but found a strongly-entrenched line on the comparatively flat country beyond us. On the 21st, the Boers displayed considerable activity on our left, and the Commander-in-Chief desired me to move two batteries from right to left. At a subsequent date, during the day, I found it impossible to proceed without howitzers, and telegraphed for four from Potgieter's. These arrived early on the morning of the 22nd, and the Commander-in-Chief, arriving about the same time, directed me to place two of these howitzers on the left, two having already been placed on the right flank. I pointed out to the Commander-in-Chief that it would be impossible to get waggons through by the road leading past Fair View, unless we first took Spion Kop, which lies within about 2,000 yards of the road. The Commander-in-Chief agreed that Spion Kop would have to be taken. Accordingly that evening orders were drawn up giving the necessary instructions to Gen. Talbot Coke to take Spion Kop that night, but, owing to an absence of sufficient reconnaissance, he requested that the attack might be put off for a day. On January 23 the Commander-in-Chief came into camp, the attack on Spion Kop was decided upon, and Lieut.-Col. à Court, of the Headquarters Staff, was directed by the Commander-in-Chief to accompany Gen. Woodgate, who was detailed to command the attacking column. . . . On the morning of January 25 the Commander-in-Chief arrived, decided to retire the force, and assumed direct command. The whole of the waggons of the 5th Division were got down to the drift during the day, and were crossed over before 2 p.m. on January 26. The arrangements for the retirement of the 5th Division were exceedingly well got out, and the retirement was made in good order during the night of the 26th, the whole of the troops crossing to the south side of the Tugela before daylight, and the waggons were packed, and the troops bivouacked near the spruit about two miles to the east of the pontoon bridges."

EVACUATION OF SPION KOP.

Another despatch is a report from Sir C. Warren upon the capture and subsequent evacuation of Spion Kop. After describing the preliminary movements, he states that Gen. Woodgate, having secured the summit on the 24th, reported that he had entrenched a position, and hoped that he was secure, but that the fog was too thick to permit him to see. The position was rushed without casualties, other than three men wounded. Next morning, however, the General received a heliograph message: "Reinforcements at once or all lost. General dead."

"I immediately ordered Gen. Coke to proceed to his assistance, and to take command of the troops. He started at once, and was accompanied by the Middlesex and Dorsetshire Regiments. I replied to Col. Crofton: 'I am sending two battalions, and the Imperial Light Infantry are on their way up. You must hold on to the last. No surrender.' This occurred about 10 a.m."

The General next signalled the appointment of Col. Thorneycroft in command of the summit, but, owing to the breakdown of the apparatus, he could get no further information from the Kop. After paying a high tribute to the admirable conduct of officers and men, Sir Charles concludes:—

"In the absence of Gen. Coke, whom I ordered to come to report in person as to the situation, the evacuation took place under orders given upon his own responsibility by Lieut.-Col. Thorneycroft. This occurred in the face of the vigorous protests of Gen. Coke's Brigade-Major, the officers commanding the Middlesex Regiment, and others. It is a matter for the Commander-in-Chief to decide whether there should be an investigation into the question of the unauthorised evacuation of Spion Kop."

SIR R. BULLER'S REPLY.

Sir R. Buller, in commenting upon Sir C. Warren's report, says:—

"I have not thought it necessary to order any investigation. If at sundown the defence of the summit had been taken regularly in hand, entrenchments laid out, gun emplacements prepared, the dead removed, the wounded collected, and, in fact, the whole place brought under regular military command, and careful arrangements made for the supply of water and food to the scattered fighting line, the hills would have been held, I am sure. But no arrangements were made. Gen. Coke appears to have been ordered away just as he would have been useful, and no one succeeded him; those on the top were ignorant of the fact that guns were coming up, and generally there was a want of organisation and system that acted most unfavourably on the defence. It is admitted by all that Col. Thorneycroft acted with the greatest gallantry throughout the day, and really saved the situation. Preparations for the second day's defence should have been organised during the day, and have been commenced at nightfall. As this was not done, I think Col. Thorneycroft exercised a wise discretion. Our losses, I regret to say, were very heavy, but the enemy admitted to our doctors that theirs were equally severe, and, though we were not successful in retaining the position, the losses inflicted on the enemy and the attack generally have had a marked effect upon them. I cannot close these remarks without bearing testimony to the gallant and admirable behaviour of the troops, the endurance shown by the Lancashire Fusiliers, the Middlesex Regiment, and Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry was admirable, while the efforts of the 2nd Batn. Scottish Rifles and 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifles were equally good, and the Royal Lancas- ters fought gallantly."

Obituary.

NAVY.

Rear-Admiral Hubert Campion, C.B., died at Lee, Kent, on the 13th inst., aged 74 years. He entered the Navy in 1848, and rose through the usual grades, becoming Commander in 1855, and Captain in 1863. Seven years later he retired, and was made Rear-Admiral on the retired list in 1878. During the Crimean War Rear-Admiral Campion was senior Lieutenant of the Vesuvius, the only ship which took part in the battle of the Alma, covering the attack of the French by shelling the Russians. He was in command of the same vessel during the hurricane at Balaclava, when the Vesuvius narrowly escaped destruction by a transport crossing her bows carrying away the bowsprit and otherwise damaging the vessel. The abilities he had displayed thus early in his career led to his being selected as harbour-master of Balaclava until he was relieved by Admiral Boxer. He took part in both Kertch expeditions and in all the operations in the Sea of Azoff, during the latter part of which he commanded the Ardent. At the fall of Sevastopol he was gazetted promotion for his gallant services, and received the Crimean and Turkish medals. He was also a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

Lieut. Charles Herring died on the 11th inst., from fatal injuries sustained on the previous evening. He left his residence at Devonport at 9 p.m., and was shortly after discovered on the foreshore with a gash on the left side of the head and unconscious. His injuries were quickly attended to, but he died without having regained consciousness. Lieutenant Herring was born in July, 1839, joined the Navy as a second-class boy in 1854, was promoted to warrant officer in December, 1865, received a commission as chief gunner in January, 1890, and retired in 1893 with the honorary rank of lieutenant.

ARMY.

Major-Gen. Henry James Bell, Colonel, retired list, late 105th Light Infantry, died at Florence on the 6th inst. Born Oct. 27, 1831, he joined the Indian Army as Ensign June 14, 1850; became Lieutenant Oct. 15, 1854; Captain, July 30, 1862. On appointment to the 105th Light Infantry, then being transferred to the Imperial establishment, he was promoted Major Oct. 3, 1870; Lieutenant-Colonel, July 7, 1875; Colonel, July 7, 1880; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General, April 23, 1884.

Col. William Mathew Dunbar, retired list, late 34th and 24th Regiments, died at Edinburgh on the 15th inst. of syncope. Born Oct. 21, 1835, he joined the Army Jan. 5, 1855; became Captain Sept. 2, 1862; Major Nov. 14, 1874; Lieutenant-Colonel Nov. 29, 1879; and retired with the honorary rank of Colonel Sept. 4, 1885; served with the 34th Regiment in the Crimean war, and was present at the siege of Sevastopol; assault on the Redan, Sept. 8 (medal with clasp and Turkish medal). He also served through the Indian Mutiny, and took part in the relief of Lucknow (medal with clasp). He went through the Kafir war of 1878 with the 2nd Batn. 24th Regiment, and was with the 1st Batn. in the second advance into Zululand. He was present both at Isandula and Ulundi; twice mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp and brevet of Lieut.-Colonel. In addition to his war medals Col. Dunbar was the possessor of the Jubilee medal. He was for ten years a member of Her Majesty's Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, from which he retired on half-pay.

Capt. Reginald Arthur Haworth Peel, 2nd Life Guards, died at Bloemfontein on the 16th inst., of enteric fever. Born April 23, 1865, he joined the 2nd Life Guards as Lieutenant from the Militia May 6, 1885, and became Captain Nov. 19, 1893.

Capt. Bertram Charles Christopher Spencer Meeking, 10th Hussars, died at Bloemfontein of enteric fever on the 16th inst. Born March 24, 1864, a son of Lieut.-Col. Meeking, Richings Park, Colnbrook, Bucks, he joined the 10th Hussars as 2nd Lieutenant Feb. 11, 1888; became Lieutenant Sept. 18, 1889; and Captain Jan. 2, 1897.

Capt. William Hall Eccles, late of the Rifle Brigade, of 30, Clifton Gardens, Folkestone, died very suddenly on the 18th inst., aged 62.

Capt. Thomas Shaw Johnson, I.S.C. (33rd Madras Infantry), on special service with the Kashmere Imperial Service troops, was killed at the end of last month by falling down a khud on the Chilas road, near Gilgit. Born April 7, 1864, he joined the Bedfordshire Regiment as Lieutenant Feb. 6, 1884; and was transferred to the Staff Corps April 5, 1886; and became Captain Feb. 6, 1885. He served in the Burmese Expedition 1885-86 (medal with three clasps).

Capt. Ion Grove White, I.S.C., died at Kursiang, Himalayas, on the 26th ult. Born June 1, 1869; he joined the East Surrey Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant, Sept. 28, 1887; became Lieutenant April 10, 1889; was transferred to the Staff Corps, March 3, 1892 (16th Bengal Cavalry), and became Captain Sept. 28, 1898. He was appointed Adjutant of the Governor-General's Body Guard, Nov. 21, 1898, from the 16th Bengal Cavalry.

Lieut. Vere Henry Ambrose Awdry, 2nd Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, was killed in action at Spion Kop on Jan. 24. Born June 3, 1872, only son of the late Major Ambrose Awdry, R.E., he joined the Lancashire Fusiliers as 2nd Lieutenant Feb. 20, 1895, and became Lieutenant April 6, 1898.

Lieut. Horace William Ritchie, 2nd Batn. North Staffordshire Regiment (Mounted Infantry), who was reported missing at Waterval Drift on Feb. 15, has been found dead by the 16th Lancers near Portze, about fifteen miles from Jacobsdal. Born Jan. 9, 1876, he joined the North Staffordshire Regiment Feb. 29, 1896, and became Lieutenant Aug. 6, 1898.

Lieut. Frank Russell-Brown, 1st Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, died on the 4th inst. of wounds received in action near Bloemfontein Waterworks. Born March 24, 1872, the eldest son of the late Col. F. D. M. Brown, V.C., he joined the Royal Munster Fusiliers as 2nd Lieutenant Dec. 27, 1892, and became Lieutenant August 1, 1895.

2nd Lieut. Edward Oswald Neville Owen Leggett, 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, died at Ladysmith on the 15th inst. Born July 18, 1878, the only surviving son of Gen. E. O. Leggett, of 40, Cheniston Gardens, W., he joined the Royal Scots Fusiliers from the 5th Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers Nov. 15, 1899.

2nd Lieut. Stamford Henry Hutton, 1st Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, died at Ladysmith on the 15th inst. of enteric fever. Born Jan. 7, 1880, the youngest son of Mr. Alfred Hutton, of Rookwood, he joined the Army Dec. 6, 1899.

FUNERAL OF SIR DONALD STEWART.

The remains of Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, G.C.B., were laid to rest at Brompton on Saturday last, having arrived in England from Gibraltar on the 12th inst., and placed in the Great Hall at Chelsea. The coffin was removed early on Saturday morning to the Hospital Chapel, where the first part of the funeral service was read. The coffin was covered with the Union Jack, and at the head were the honours and medals of the late Field-Marshal on a cushion, while at the foot was his bâton. On the lid were his cocked hat and sword, and beside them was laid the large wreath of laurels sent by her Majesty. It was tied with white satin ribbon and attached to it was a card bearing the words: "A mark of respect and regard for a gallant soldier from his Sovereign. —VICTORIA, R.I., written by the Queen's own hand. Lady Stewart's beautiful wreath of mauve orchids was placed at the head of the coffin, and those of the late Sir Donald's children and grandchildren were disposed around.

The service was fixed for noon, by which time the small chapel was filled with officers in uniform and other friends of the late Governor, including several ladies. The pensioners of the Royal Hospital, the boys of the Duke of York's Military School with their band, and the Corps of Commissionaires lined Burton's Court during the arrival of the congregation. Her Majesty was represented at the obsequies by Lieut.-Col. Arthur Davidson, M.V.O.; the German Emperor by Count von Bredow; the Prince of Wales by Field-Marshal Sir Frederick P. Haines; the Duke of Connaught by Col. Egerton; the Duke of Cambridge by Major-Gen. Bateson; Prince Christian by Col. the Hon. Charles Eliot, C.V.O.; and the Duke of York by the Hon. Derek Keppel. Lord Wolseley was present, attended by the officers of the Headquarters Staff of the Army. The German and French military attachés also attended the funeral.

The chief mourners, who occupied the Governor's pew under the west gallery, were Lady Stewart; Captain Donald Stewart, his son; Lady Jenner and Mrs. Jenner, his daughters; Major Sir Walter Jenner, his son-in-law; Capt. L. C. D. Jenner, and Sir James Hills-Johnes, V.C. Among the personal friends of the late veteran attending to pay the last tribute of respect to his memory were:—

Gen. Sir Thomas Gordon, Gen. Sir W. Stirling Hamilton, Lord Mount Stephen, Lady Newmarch, the Dowager Lady Napier of Magdala, the Right Hon. John Morley, M.P., Major-General Abadie, Colonel the Hon. L. P. Dawnay, Gen. Green Wilkinson, the Right Hon.

Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth, Lady Macpherson, Major-Gen. Schwabe, Major-Gen. Minto Elliott, Surg.-Gen. Marston, Sir Alfred and Lady Lyall, Surg.-Gen. Fraser, Col. John Robertson, Lieut.-Col. Boyes, Capt. Knox, the Misses Davies, Mrs. Oliver Barnett, Mrs. W. S. Seton-Kerr, Mrs. Balfour, Mr. W. B. Martin, Mr. Hugh R. Troup, Miss Wade, Mr. A. W. Chapman, Mr. W. Lee Warner, Dr. Longhurst, Miss Sullivan, Miss E. Westmacott, Mrs. Hamilton Campbell, Mrs. Biddulph, Mr. W. B. Young, and the Rev. George Kirkwood.

There were also present the Marquis of Ripon, Lord George Hamilton, Lord Strathcona, Lord Eustace Cecil, Col. Sir Henry Hugh Oldham, representing the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms, Admiral of the Fleet Sir J. E. Commerell, Admiral the Right Hon. Sir John Dalrymple-Hay, Admiral A. Corry, Gen. Sir J. J. H. Gordon, Gen. Sir Charles Johnson, Gen. Sir Francis Norman, Gen. Sir Allen Johnson, Gen. Sir Oliver Newmarch, Gen. Sir E. Bulwer, Gen. Sir J. W. Campbell, Gen. Webster, Gen. Godfrey Clerk, Major-Gen. Badoock, Major-Gen. Wilkinson, Major-Gen. J. Upperton, Lieut.-Gen. J. Fryer, Surg.-Gen. A. Payne, Sir Bruce Seton, Major-Gen. Terry Astley, Major-Gen. Robinson, Major-Gen. Vivian Cox, Surg.-Gen. Meane, Surg.-Gen. Cattell, Sir Owen Burne, Major-Gen. Black, Lieut.-Gen. F. Lance, and many others.

The royal representatives and members of the Headquarters Staff were conducted to the stalls reserved for them by Capt. R. B. Jupp, who had charge of the arrangements in the chapel. During the seating of the congregation the band of the Scots Guards, stationed in the west gallery, played the Dead March in "Saul." As 12 struck, the Rev. Dr. Edghill, Chaplain-General of the Forces, entered the church, accompanied by the Rev. J. H. S. Moxley and the Rev. J. Abernethy-Colbeck. The opening sentences of the Burial Service were recited by the Rev. J. H. S. Moxley, after which the Psalm "Domine Refugium" was monotoned by the Rev. Abernethy-Colbeck. This was followed by the hymn "Nearer, my God, to Thee," the singing being led by the drummers of the Scots Guards, who were seated with the band in the west gallery. The Rev. Dr. Edghill then read the Lesson from Corinthians, and the service was brought to a close with the hymn, "Now the labourer's task is o'er."

After the service the band played Chopin's Marche Funèbre, during which the coffin was borne out of the chapel by a carrying party of the Royal Horse Guards, the pall-bearers being Gens. Sir H. W. Norman, Sir J. M. Adye, Sir Michael Biddulph, Lord Chelmsford, Sir A. Alison, Sir P. S. Lumsden, Sir A. B. Johnson, Sir J. J. H. Gordon, Sir H. H. Gough, V.C., and F. H. Chapman, Major-Gen. Sir J. C. M'Neill, V.C., and Col. Cunliffe Martin. The orders and medals of the late Governor were carried by Col. Sir Henry Collett, and his bâton as a Field-Marshal by Major-Gen. C. W. Robinson. The guard of honour of the Goldstream Guards received the body with the usual honours as it emerged from the chapel, and a salute of seventeen minute guns was fired in the grounds by a battery of Royal Horse Artillery. The coffin was placed on a gun-carriage, drawn by six horses, and left for Brompton Cemetery with an escort of the Royal Horse Guards, and accompanied by a squadron of the 10th Hussars and a squadron of the 13th Hussars.

The procession reached the cemetery at 1.30. At the entrance a guard of honour of the 1st Batn. 1st Grenadier Guards, with the colours, band, and drums, was drawn up under Capt. Coventry. A space round the grave was kept by a detachment of the 3rd Batn. Scots Guards, with the pipers, commanded by Capt. Manners, and the sixteen pensioners representing the Hospital stood at the head of the grave. Captain Donald Stewart, Captain Jenner, and Sir Walter Jenner followed the coffin, which was carried from the gun-carriage to the grave by a party of Grenadier Guards. The Chaplain-General read the committal prayers, and as the last sentences were spoken the coffin, which bore the simple inscription "Donald Martin Stewart, 1824-1900," was lowered into the grave by Guardsmen, and the troops presented arms. The scene at the graveside was most impressive. Round three sides were the detachments of Foot Guards, at the head of the grave the Chaplain of the Forces, and near him the Commander-in-Chief, the chief mourners, and the senior officers.

The Commander-in-Chief has expressed his satisfaction at the appearance of the troops who took part in the funeral, and with the admirable manner in which the military arrangements generally were carried out.

10th Hussars.—Lieut. the Hon. D. R. H. Anderson-Pelham, who was reported missing after the battle, was taken prisoner at Sanna's Post, and is now lying in the hospital at Pretoria, suffering from typhoid fever.

13th Hussars.—Capt. MacLaren, who was severely wounded lately in action at Mafeking, is stated to be progressing favourably and out of all danger.

15th Hussars.—Major de Crespigny is in temporary command of this regiment at Meerut, with Major Peyton as officiating second in command.

16th Lancers.—The death is announced after a long and painful illness of Mr. W. E. Sheppard, late R.S.M. of the regiment, which took place on March 30. Mr. Sheppard joined the 16th in 1855, went out with the regiment to India in 1865, and returned in 1877. For many years he was superintendent in a well-known military club, and for the past three years was chairman of the committee of the 16th Lancers' Aliwal Dinner Fund. In the latter capacity he made himself popular both with the committee and the members generally.

17th Lancers.—Lieut. the Hon. W. R. Wyndham left England on Monday last in the Narrung for the Cape to join headquarters.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major J. A. Tanner has passed in India the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

INFANTRY.

Scots Guards.—Major Heyworth has been transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Capt. Stirling, 2nd Batn., left England on Wednesday in the Dilwara for South Africa, to join his battalion on vacating his appointment in the Egyptian Army.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Capt. Lethbridge, 2nd Batn., left England in the Dilwara for South Africa.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Major Riddell has been transferred from the 2nd Batn. to the new 3rd Batn. at York, on promotion. Capt. Moulton-Barrett is also posted to the 3rd Batn., on promotion, as are 2nd Lieuts. Wilson and Graham, on appointment. Capt. Sapte, Lieut. Wild, and 2nd Lieuts. Riddell, the Hon. N. C. Gathorne-Hardy, and French are posted to the new 4th Batn. at York.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Col. McCalmont, 6th (Militia) Batn., has been confirmed in the appointment at Simonstown. Major Morrice is transferred from the 2nd Batn. in South Africa to the 1st Batn. in India, and Capt. Poole from the 3rd Batn. to the 1st Batn., both on promotion. Major Mookler is posted to the new 4th Batn. at Colchester, of which he will be second in command. Lieuts. Besant, 2nd Batn., and Mitchell, 3rd Batn., are transferred to the 4th Batn., to which 2nd Lieuts. Boxwell and Gordon are posted, on appointment.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Lieut. Villiers-Stuart, 4th Batn., is appointed Superintendent of Gymnasia, Dover.

King's Regiment (8th).—Major Nicholson is transferred from the 2nd Batn. to the new 3rd Batn., and Major Swann from the 2nd Batn. to the new 4th Batn., on promotion. Capt. Bailey has taken up the duties of Adjutant of the new 3rd Batn. The following officers are appointed to the new units, viz.:—to 3rd Batn. Capt. Austin, Armitage, and Pinwill, Lieut. Maofie, and 2nd Lieut. Dean; to 4th Batn., Capt. Brush and Sheppard, Lieut. Denham, and 2nd Lieuts. Owen and Feneran.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Major Cox has been appointed to the 2nd Batn. in South Africa, on being brought back from half-pay. Capt. Gaitskill, Lieut. Spring, and 2nd Lieuts. Aked and Warren, 2nd Batn., left England on Wednesday in the Dilwara for South Africa.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—We are asked to publish the following letter from Lieut.-Col. Bullock, 2nd Batn., who is now a prisoner of war in Pretoria. The letter is addressed to the Secretary of the Three Towns Association in London, in answer to one sent to him before news was received of his capture by the Boers, congratulating the regiment on their gallantry at Colenso.

I received your letter here to-day. As you will already know, I am here as a prisoner of war, and so cannot personally communicate your letter to the men of the 2nd Devonshire Regiment, but I will forward it to the regiment. Let me assure you that the kind thoughts of our fellow-countrymen, as well as of the larger sympathy of our fellow-countrymen, are very precious to us. You will kindly tell the members of your association that we thank them cordially for their kind wishes, and at the same time assure them that no commanding officer ever had braver men to lead to battle than I had at Colenso. I cannot go into the details of that fight, as the scope of our communications is somewhat restricted by censorship, but the men of Devon fought in a way worthy of the traditions of their county. We in captivity have had our pulses thrilled by the accounts later prisoners have brought in of the conduct of the 1st Batn. at Platrand, crowning as it did their previous gallantry at Elands Laagte.

I remain, &c.,

G. M. BULLOCK, Lieut.-Col.

2nd Batn. Devonshire Regiment.

Col. Bullock, it will be remarked, was captured under particularly unfortunate circumstances, he having been taken prisoner whilst nobly looking after his wounded on the field. Lieut.-Col. Park, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town, on the 11th inst., in the Orcana, for England, invalided.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—Capt. Murphy is transferred from the 2nd Batn. in India to the 1st Batn. in South Africa, on promotion.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Couchman, D.S.O., and Major Stisted, 1st Batn., have passed in India the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. Capt. Brocklehurst has been posted to the 2nd Batn. in South Africa, on restoration to the establishment.

Leicestershire Regiment (17th).—Col. Sarson, commanding the Volunteer Battalion, has received authority for the formation of two battalions in connection with the regiment. The first will be made up of the town companies, and the second the county companies, and both will be augmented. So many recruits have recently applied for admittance that no doubt is felt as to bringing both up to full strength. Capt. Smith is transferred on promotion from the depot 1st Batn. at Leicester to 2nd Batn. at the Curragh. Capt. Drew, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 11th inst., for England, in the Orcana, invalided.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Major Brunner is transferred on promotion from the 2nd Batn., in South Africa, to the 3rd Batn. at Malta, Major Deane being transferred from the 3rd Batn. to the new 4th Batn. at Chatham. Capt. Adair, from the 3rd Batn., has taken up the duties of Adjutant of the new 4th Batn., to which Lieut. Robinson and 2nd Lieuts. Magniac and Allen have been posted.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Capt. Trenchard has been transferred, on promotion, from the 1st Batn. in India to the 2nd Batn. in South Africa.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—The annual regimental dinner, which usually takes place at the Albion, Aldersgate Street, during May, will not take place until the return of one of the battalions to England.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Gen. Ross, a former commanding officer, has added to the many gifts he and Mrs. Ross have already sent to the 2nd Batn., now at the front, the very acceptable present of 500 cardigans and 500 pairs of woollen drawers. Capt. Gray has been transferred, on promotion, from the 1st Batn. in India to the 2nd Batn. in South Africa.

Scottish Rifles (26th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. arrived at Kimberley on the 12th inst., and will be stationed there.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—Major Monro is posted on promotion to the new 3rd Batn., and Major Hovell to the new 4th Batn., both at Aldershot; Capt. Reddie is also posted to the 4th Batn.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd).—Major Eveleigh is posted to this battalion, on promotion.

Dorsetshire Regiment (39th).—Lieut. Woodward is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 3rd Bombay Light Infantry.

King's Own Light Infantry (51st).—Major Power and Lieut. Ball-Acton left the Royal Albert Docks on Monday last in the Narrung for South Africa.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Major Salmon is transferred from the 4th Batn. to the 1st Batn., on promotion. Capt. Beaumont, 3rd Batn., and 2nd Lieut. Reade, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 11th inst., in the Orcana, for England, invalided. Lieuts. Cathcart and Hobson, 4th Batn., left England on Wednesday for South Africa in the Dilwara.

Gloucester Regiment (61st).—Capt. Messiter and Rising are transferred on promotion to the 1st Batn. (28th).

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—Major Kirkwood is posted to the 2nd Batn. (99th) in South Africa, on promotion, as are also Capt. Hasler and Bradbridge.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—Lieut. Hunt-Grubbe sailed from Cape Town on the 11th inst. in the Orcana for England, invalided.

Welsh Regiment (69th).—Capt. Bannerman-Phillips has been posted to this battalion, and does duty in the depot on restoration to the establishment.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Capt. Wedderburn has been transferred on promotion to the 2nd Batn. (92nd).

Cameron Highlanders (79th).—Capt. Sorel-Cameron, 1st Batn., has been appointed to the Egyptian Army.

Royal Irish Rifles (83rd).—Capt. Eckford and Baker have been transferred on promotion to the 2nd Batn. (86th) in South Africa.

York and Lancaster Regiment (84th).—Capt. Thurnall is transferred on promotion to the 1st Batn. (85th) in South Africa.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—Lieut. Dooner, who was wounded at Nicholson's Nek, and who has been in Ladysmith throughout the siege, arrived home in the s.s. Majestic on Sunday last.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Lieut. Best sailed from Cape Town on the 11th inst. in the Orcana for England, invalided.

Manchester Regiment (96th).—Major Melvill is appointed to the new 4th Batn. at Aldershot.

Royal West Kent Regiment (97th).—Mrs. Grove, wife of Lieut.-Col. Grove, is collecting for the battalion and would be grateful for woollen (not flannelette) shirts, drawers, socks and comforters; or money to buy cardigans and tobacco. Parcels to Capt. Roche, The Barracks, Maidstone. Letters and subscriptions only to Mrs. Grove, Belgrave Mansions, S.W.

Leinster Regiment (100th) sailed from Southampton on Wednesday in the Dilwara for South Africa. The officers who left with headquarters were Lieut.-Col. Martin (in command); Majors Poulerton, Seton, and Stavert; Capt. White, Dickinson, Ricketts, Craske, Legg, Dugan (Adj.), and O'Shee; Lieuts. Mather, Jones, Macdonald, Waddell, Leicester, Martin, McCausland, and Raynsford; 2nd Lieuts. Scobell, Waudby, Denison, Orpen-Palmer, Butler-Kearney, and Brooke; and Capt. and Qmr. Wilkin.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—It is under consideration to bring at least one battalion home from South Africa, the strain of the service having thinned the ranks of duty men considerably. Lieut. Ely sailed from Cape Town on the 11th inst. in the Orcana for England, invalided.

Rifle Brigade.—Lieut. Oldfield, 4th Batn., left England on Wednesday in the Dilwara for South Africa.

Army Pay Department.—Changes of station, &c.:—To South Africa: Lieut.-Col. Moore-Lane from Shorncliffe; Major Collings from Ceylon; Capt. Vowell from Ayr; Capt. Bass from Bermuda; Capt. Ray from Barbados; and Capt. Holbrook from Jamaica. Capt. Vigors, Aldershot to Ayr. Retired officers temporarily employed: Lieut.-Col. Potter, Feb. 23; Lieut.-Col. Haldane, Feb. 24; Lieut.-Col. Fox, March 21; and Col. Barr, March 26.

VISITORS TO THE CAPE.

Sir Alfred Milner has telegraphed from Cape Town:—

"The number of visitors to South Africa is constantly increasing and includes many, especially ladies, who seem to have no particular call of duty or business. I am sure this would not be the case if it was realised at home that visitors who at ordinary times would be most welcome may, under existing circumstances, be a source of serious inconvenience, interfering with the work of military and civil officers and putting a strain on our limited means of accommodation, which are urgently required for those who have duties to perform here or who are invalided from the front. The considerable increase in the expense of living, at all times very high, which is caused by the excessive influx of visitors, is a hardship on persons of the latter class who may not be in possession of large means. I think that many whose coming here is prompted by nothing more than a general interest in the war would elect to stay at home if they knew that their presence was a hindrance rather than a help. For persons travelling merely for health or recreation, and, above all, for ladies so travelling, no place could be less suitable at the present moment than South Africa. The Field-Marshal Commander-in-Chief, to whom I have submitted this message, authorises me to add that he fully concurs in the views expressed in it."

ROYAL ARTILLERY PROMOTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—I have read with interest the letters of "Anxious Father" and "Spectator," complaining that second lieutenants in the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery are not promoted to the rank of lieutenant till the expiration of three years. I for one should be pleased to know for what reason or on what principles that rule exists when in the cavalry and infantry the average time is well under two years.

JUSTICE.

"THE MORNING POST" says: "FASHION, the monthly periodical devoted to the costume of men, appeals to a special public; and meets its most exacting demands." "FASHION" (conducted and edited by Beau Brummel, junr.) is published at 4, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W., and the yearly subscription, which may be started in any month, is 7s. 6d., payable in advance to the Manager. THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS says of Fashion: "Here is a periodical which sheds the light of wisdom upon masculine modes."

Reviews.

SOME SERIALS.

The Edinburgh Review maintains its classic character, and, in times like these, it is pleasant to turn to its discussion of such subjects as Religion in Greek Literature, Morris and Rossetti, Cappodocian Discoveries, and Evolution of the Stars. But even the Edinburgh Review must step down into the arena, and accordingly we find certain articles dealing with current politics. Thus there is one paper upon the Alaska Boundary, and the reviewer points out that the questions at issue are certainly not new, though the opening of the Yukon goldfields has given them prominence. The Edinburgh attributes the attitude of the American Government to the pervading prejudice and ignorance of the masses, and has no doubt that if President McKinley or Mr. Hay had been allowed a free hand the question would have been settled in terms honourable and satisfactory to both countries. Political exigencies, however, have had to be reckoned with, and the American plenipotentiaries could not agree to any conditions unacceptable to the Senate. If Mr. McKinley should be successful in November things may go well, but otherwise the anti-English party will rule the policy of the United States. Another article of interest, though a little discursive, is on "The Partition of the Western Pacific," and the opinion of Sir Cyprian Bridge is cited in relation to the great intelligence of the natives of Oceania in general and of the Melanians in particular. "Within the limited sphere of their requirements, whatever they do they do thoroughly." An article upon Great Britain and South Africa is mainly political, and the contention is that, though the grievances of the Uitlanders were great and undeniable, they were enormously exaggerated by the friends of the Chartered Company, but that there can be no doubt that Kruger wished to make the Transvaal an entirely free and independent sovereign state. Our own Government, up to the very last hour, were curiously ill-informed of the spirit which animated the Government and people of the Transvaal, in whom there was no intention to surrender. Incidentally the reviewer defends the Intelligence Department. He says, with truth, that if the Boers had possessed in an adequate degree that mobility which it has been the fashion to ascribe to them, our difficulties might have become veritable disasters. With whom is peace to be made? Hitherto, in enlarging the bounds of the Empire, the defeated sovereign has handed over the allegiance and territory of his former subjects, and the settlement has thus been in some sort regularised. In this way we gained Canada, and Alsace and Lorraine were ceded to Germany. But now the conditions are entirely different, and statesmanship will be put to a severe test, and, says the Edinburgh Review, "we shall gain nothing by any attempts to pretend to ourselves that our rights henceforth over the Republics spring from anything but conquest pure and simple."

The English Historical Review has a number of interesting articles, including one by Mr. Basil Williams on "The Foreign Policy of England under Walpole," and another by Professor Alfred Stern on "Colonel Cradock's Missions to Egypt." Those missions were somewhat of a failure, and Codrington was strongly of opinion that the threat of a blockade of Alexandria would have far more effect upon Mahomet Ali than any negotiation whatever. Mr. J. Holland Rose contributes an interesting note upon the Secret Articles of the Treaty of Amiens, in the existence of which he gives good reasons for having no faith.

Tvos Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur is the appropriate motto of the North American Review, which proudly draws attention to the fact that it is now in its eighty-fifth year. Here we have M. Zola filled with the horror of war, and impressed with a peculiar social and political condition which threatens precipitate ruin and general conflagration. Like M. Bloch he believes that war will kill war, and that the present crisis is war's death cry. Then Mr. Thomas B. Shearman writes trenchantly upon "Mistaken Sympathy with Republics," and particularly with South African Republics. After Mr. Shearman comes Gen. du Barail, formerly French Minister of War, who defends the Boers, and denounces us furiously. He says that the true cause of the war is iniquitous, because of "the lying pretext under which we proposed to seize a country in which we have no right," and immoral because no honourable Government wages war of mere conquest. The General roundly declares that Mr. Chamberlain "conceived this act of veritable piracy," and that the British Government promoted the Jameson Raid. Gen. du Barail is full of admiration for the "heroic Boers," and seems positively to revel in the "slime" with which they procured guns and ammunition.

"England herself transported them without knowing it; the instructors and mechanics embarked under the title of professors of agriculture, as merchants, or even as miners. The guns, gun carriages, and ammunition waggons were carefully taken apart, and each piece, packed separately, was transported by British ships as agricultural and other machinery, thus hoodwinking the unsuspecting agents of England. . . . I firmly believe that such a people, who trust God in all things, is invincible, and that the English, who now confess that it will take 250,000 men to win, will never succeed. And who knows but that Europe, electrified by the sight of such heroism, will then emerge from her selfish apathy, and make England understand that the trident of Neptune is not yet the sceptre of the world."

Feilden's Magazine is still "militantly British," and still extremely good as a record of industrial progress. We have also received the Humane Review, a new serial, which has for its motto, "No greater shame to man than inhumanity," and maintains its principles in a number of well written articles upon such subjects as "Science versus Common Sense," by G. Bernard Shaw; "Inhumanity in Schools," "Animal Protection in France," "Militarism and Humanity." In short, the editor aims to expose the barbarity of civilised societies.

Horncastle's Manual, edited by Walter R. Horncastle, 61, Cheapside, has appeared once more. To commend it is unnecessary. It is "a technical adviser for all connected with companies," containing a great deal of matter, and is by one who has had a very long experience of advertising and of the best means of bringing things before the public.

Vickers's Newspaper Gazetteer for 1900 (5, Nicholas Lane), is a new candidate for public favour, and appears to be a sufficient catalogue of the newspapers of the United Kingdom with various classified lists in convenient form.

We have also received As You Like It, a volume in Blackwood's excellent School Shakespeare; Tales of Ancient Thessaly, an elementary Latin reading book (Blackwood); The Law of Wills and the Law Affecting Trustees in Bankruptcy, being legal handbooks for popular use, and Bishop's Travellers' Telegraph Code, all three published by Effingham Wilson.

It is intended to fill the places of the Army recruiters who will be withdrawn by the approaching embodiment of the Militia by appointing a considerable number of paid pensioner recruiters.

The War Office has purchased from the Marquis of Lorne, at a cost of £30,000, 48 acres of land at Kilreggan, near Greenock, on which a fort will be erected in a position over the mining ground of the Clyde Submarine Volunteer Engineers. The fort will be mounted with heavy guns to command the Clyde from the Cowal shores to Dumbarton. Barrack accommodation will be provided, and the work will soon be commenced.

THE OLD-ESTABLISHED AND WELL-KNOWN FIRM OF

G. E. FRODSHAM & CO.

Have appointed THE DIAMOND MERCHANTS ALLIANCE, Limited, 68, Piccadilly, London, W., to be their Sole Agents for the sale of their CELEBRATED WATCHES, known all over the World.

G. E. FRODSHAM & CO., Chronometer, Watch and Clock Manufacturers to Her Majesty the Queen, H.B.H. the Prince of Wales, the Lords of the Admiralty, the Indian and Colonial Governments, the Royal Observatory, the Chinese Maritime Customs, &c., &c.

This celebrated firm, whose business extends back to 1750 (over 150 years ago), when it was first started by William Frodsham, has a world-wide reputation for the excellence of the Watches supplied by them, which are of the finest workmanship and finish. With the aid of machinery and modern appliances Watches can now be manufactured at much less cost than heretofore; and Messrs. G. E. Frodsham & Co. can now supply first-class English Watches in Crystal, Full or Demi Hunting (Illustration). It is well known that the fact of a Watch having Frodsham's name upon it enhances the value about 20 per cent. All other kinds of Watches up to £300 can be found in the fully illustrated and descriptive Catalogue, which will be sent post free upon application by their Sole Agents—

INFANTRY:

Concise Instruction in ADVANCED, REAR, AND FLANK GUARDS, ESCORT TO GUNS, OUTPOSTS, RECONNOITRING, ATTACK, &c.

By Captain C. J. MORSE (East Lancashire Regiment).
Post Free, 1s. 6d.

This little book, which fits the pocket of the patrol jacket, deals with each subject in a complete and practical manner, and contains illustrative plates on the formations of Infantry advanced guards, a Battalion on outposts, and a Battalion in the attack. The procedure and duties of all ranks employed on outpost work are clearly detailed. The formation and conduct of Infantry Patrols, the points to be noted in the reconnaissance of an enemy, and a country, and in that of positions, are concise and to the point.
It should prove of great service to INFANTRY OFFICERS,
N.C. OFFICERS and PRIVATES.

THE BRITISH NAVY.

NOTWITHSTANDING the hold which the war must have upon everyone's attention, there is reason for hoping that public interest in the Navy is also very much alive. During the next week the receptions which are to be given to the Powerful's Naval Brigade should serve a useful purpose in this connection. It will be well, too, if the speakers at these functions should remind the country that it is not only by the gallant deeds of their bluejackets and marines that they must estimate the part played by the Fleet in the fortunes of the war. As Mr. Spenser Wilkinson pointed out the other day, the nation has probably to thank the Navy for the fact that it has been free of outside interference during the continuance of the struggle. Foreign Powers are not slow to recognise that although the fighting efficiency of our Fleet has not been put to the test for many years, it is a factor with which they have to reckon. It is the British Navy, as Mr. Macartney said at Newcastle, which has made the ocean pathways of six thousand miles traversed by our transports as safe as if they had run through our own territory. In this way the nation is reaping a large dividend upon the expenditure it has made on its Naval forces during the last few years. Despite, too, the criticisms which some of us have felt bound to make upon Mr. Goschen's last programme, we are quite ready to agree with the Secretary to the Admiralty that the Navy of this country is perfectly competent to deal with any attack that could be meditated by any combination of Powers who might possibly have been excited to break the friendly relations which happily now exist between them and all their European neighbours. The point is, are we taking every precaution to insure that what is now a fact shall remain one. We cannot shut our eyes to what is going on around us, and that upon the Naval horizon many indications have been given which may presage bad weather. For the moment the country will no doubt be content to address itself to expressing in the warmest possible manner its appreciation of the magnificent services rendered by our seamen and marines in South Africa, and especially by the Powerful's Brigade during the wearisome siege of Ladysmith. The arduous character of the work performed by the bluejackets under Captain Lambton has been recognised so fully in the colonies that it is most unlikely that it should meet with any less meed of praise at home. In fact the manner in which individual members of the Powerful's crew, captain and midshipman alike, have been welcomed on their return is a happy augury for the nature of the rejoicings in which all will participate next week.

No apology is needed for recurring to the lectures of Sir John Colomb and Mr. Yates, which were mentioned in our last issue. Both speakers from their different standpoints were dwelling upon Naval progress. Both indicated how they considered future Naval progress may be assured and the lines it will take. Mr. Yates dealt, in the introductory portion of his lecture, with the composition of the Channel and Mediterranean Squadrons at three separate selected periods, showing that in both squadrons there had been an enormous increase in the displacements of the ships and in their fighting efficiency. It would have been of additional interest had he compared the relative strength of the squadrons on some of the colonial stations at the same period. In Australasian waters, for example, it is doubtful whether there has been anything like a similar increase. A promise was given that when the Special Squadron was added that the Imperial Squadron should remain at the same strength, and this promise has been kept to the letter. It would, however, have been a fairer reading of the agreement if the Imperial contribution to the strength of the squadron had been increased relatively to the increase which has taken place elsewhere. Mr. Yates's forecast of the kind of Navy this country will possess twenty years hence is interesting, but we do not see at the present time any sign of development in the direction which he indicates. As his lecture shows, the advances which have been hitherto made have followed well-defined lines; there has been nothing in the nature of an abrupt departure, and this is entirely in consonance with Naval policy as we find it throughout our history. A suggestion made by Sir John Colomb, that we should decentralise our resources for providing the matériel and personnel of the Fleet is particularly timely when Mr. Goschen is excusing himself from increasing his shipbuilding vote on the plea that he has exhausted the means immediately available at home. It will depend upon many things whether or no we shall see battleships building at Sydney and Capetown, Halifax developing into a Portsmouth, or Esquimaux into a Woolwich. British shipbuilders and gunmakers, manufacturers of armour plates and machinery, will not be slow to open branch establishments at the colonial ports if they see their way to make the investment a remunerative one. The picture presented of a First Lord of the Admiralty distributing his shipbuilding Vote partly in the colonies and partly at home may not be so fanciful as it appears at present. It is not one with which we feel altogether satisfied.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY.

MANY circumstances have lately contributed to draw attention to the Russian Navy, and it has been rumoured that a further shipbuilding programme was under consideration. Practically, all the ships of the old scheme are now in hand, and every slip in the Russian yards is occupied. The Peresviet and Oslabya are completing at the New Admiralty and Baltic Yards, the Pobieda is in hand at the latter, and three other battleships—the Alexander III., Borodino, and Orel—have been laid down at the Baltic, New Admiralty, and Galerny Yards; while the coast defence ship Admiral Boutakoff is in hand, and one of the three cruisers of the Aurora class remains to be launched. The armoured cruiser Gromoboi, is not yet ready. One or two more cruisers are to be begun, and there is much building going on also in the Black Sea. A number of vessels, moreover, are under construction and well advanced abroad, including the battleship Retvisan at Philadelphia, and the Tsarevitch and the armoured cruiser Bayan at La Seyne.

The conditions are not immediately favourable to the bringing forward of a new shipbuilding programme. Progress with the old programme has not been very rapid, and the building facilities are exhausted, while to build more ships abroad would be quite contrary to M. de Witte's plans for encouraging national industries. There is also the question of money. Great demands are being made for the Siberian Railway and for other military purposes, and it is known that large movements of troops have taken place towards the Afghan frontier, which, it is announced, are not to be withdrawn until the war in South Africa is at an end, while there is an intention of mobilising 250,000 reserve men for gigantic Army manoeuvres in August. Then, again, there are internal difficulties in the Russian Navy, and the trial which has recently taken place at Sebastopol throws a strong light upon the matter. Naval officers, warrant officers, harbour officials, storekeepers, and others, were charged with defrauding the Russian Government, and of the forty-three persons accused the great majority have been condemned. The whole system at Sebastopol seems to be completely rotten, and speculation and fraud have been rife. Coal, oil, wood, and iron have been paid for which have never been delivered, or have been of inferior quality, and it was proved that sixty or seventy Naval officials have been in receipt of commissions from merchants and contractors. All these circumstances render it improbable that further demands for Naval construction will be made for some little time to come.

It has been hastily assumed that the order given for 112,000 tons of coal for the Fleet betokened preparation for possible hostilities, probably with Japan; but the fact is that such a stock is usually ordered in the spring. If Russia contemplates an active policy in Korea the time is not ripe, for the Siberian Railway is not open, and her Fleet is not ready. The demand for the acquisition of a port at Masampho is not received with favour in Japan, and it is not known whether Russia has withdrawn her claim. She is scarcely likely to attempt to enforce it, and it is believed will be content at present with a stipulation that Korea shall not alienate to any foreign Power the port of Ko-je-do. Diplomatic discussion continues in regard to these matters, and though Russia will scarcely relinquish her desire for a Korean port, there is no probability that she will yet attempt to enforce her claim in view of the strong opposition offered by Japan.

Navy Notes.

In addition to the telegrams which Captain Lambton has received since his arrival, and which we published last week, the following graceful message from the Princess of Wales at Copenhagen will give great pleasure to the Navy:—

"My heartfelt welcome to you in your return from your heroic defence of Ladysmith. Pray also convey my warmest good wishes to the officers and men of the Powerful, who so gallantly and bravely supported you in your grand and noble work. Long live the Handy Man. Hope all well on board.

ALEXANDRA."

The Channel squadron continues to play quite an important part in connection with the visit of the Queen to Ireland. On several days the ships have put to sea carrying guests to witness steam tactics, and special invitations were sent to the members of the Irish clubs in recognition of the courtesy extended to the officers of the squadron, who had been elected honorary members during their stay at Kingstown. The ships of the squadron, with the exception of the Repulse, in which there is a case of scarlet fever, have also been thrown open to visitors, and the public have largely availed themselves of this privilege. As only one ship is open at a time, the privilege does not clash with the ordinary work and drills. To-day at the review before the Queen in Phoenix Park a Naval brigade, 2,000 strong, will take part. The guns were landed on Thursday, there being sixteen 12pr. and twelve maxims, eight of which are to be manned by Marines. The men and guns came up to Dublin in boats towed by the launches of their ships, and the quays along the Liffey were lined with people to witness the unusual spectacle.

The complaints which have been made about the arrangements in the dockyard at Portsmouth on the occasion of the arrival of the Powerful do not appear to us to have any substantial foundation. It would have been easy to have made the same mistake that there was made at Southampton, where the mob who were admitted apparently took charge and even prevented friends of the returning heroes from approaching the ship. It was far better to limit the numbers, as Admiral Pelham Aldrich did at Portsmouth, than to have risked such a contretemps. It is noteworthy that the complaints do not come, so far as we have been able to discover, from friends or relatives of the Bluejackets or Marines, but rather from disappointed sightseers and newspaper representatives who were insufficiently provided with the necessary credentials.

It was a surprise to many when a letter appeared in the Times from the Secretary of the forthcoming National Bazaar in aid of the sufferers by the War without the slightest reference to the Navy. It appears that it was quite by an oversight, which, however, ought not to have occurred, that the omission of mention of the Sea Service from the letter of appeal was made by the hon. Secretary. As a matter of fact the Navy is to be well represented, and will probably have one of the best stocked and prettiest stalls in the Bazaar. Among the ladies who are supporting it are Princess Victor Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, the Countess of Dalkeith, Lady Commerell, the Countess of Clanwilliam, the Hon. Lady Fremantle, the Countess of Chesterfield, Miss Goschen, the Viscountess Duncannon, and Lady Culme-Seymour. Any contributions to the stall should be sent to the Hon. Mrs. Charlton, the Empress Rooms, Palace Hotel. The National Bazaar will be opened on May 24, and on the same day an Army and Navy Exhibition will be held at the Royal Aquarium, some portion of the sum realised being devoted to one of the Widows' and Orphans' War funds. A Royal Naval and Military Bazaar, to be held at Olympia, will be opened on June 19 under the patronage of the Queen, while Princess Louis of Battenburg is taking an interest in the naval stall.

The two concerts which Lady Bedford organised last month at Admiralty House, Bermuda, in aid of Lady Lansdowne's fund, were most successful. Bishop Ussher composed some verses for the occasion, and everybody, including the American visitors, rallied to the assistance of so good a cause. The result was the sum of £212 13s. for the fund. Lady Bedford worked very hard, and her exertions were not lessened by the fact that the Crescent had suddenly to leave to go to the assistance of the Hermes, many of the performers, including the band, being in the flagship. Nevertheless she had the gratification of knowing that her exertions were crowned with success, and we gather from the local press that everyone was pleased and delighted that such a good round sum should have been realised.

Frequent mention has been made in the course of the past few weeks of the corps known as the Natal Naval Volunteers in connection with the operations in the Garden Colony under Sir Redvers Buller, and the latest news to hand of the corps is that it has been disbanded. In a special service order issued last Tuesday the Commandant of Durban, the successor to Captain Percy Scott, stated that twenty-five of the Natal Naval Volunteers had been attached to the regular Naval Brigade at Ladysmith all through the long and wearisome siege, and that many other of the men belonging to the corps had been permitted to join, and had loyally worked with, both regular and irregular troops under Sir George White's command. Throughout the recent trying operations the Naval Volunteers have earned for themselves a reputation for steadfastness and cheerful submission to the inevitable hardships of the campaign which they may well be proud of. The Commandant of Durban, therefore, thanked them in the name of the colony for the services they had rendered to Natal and the Empire generally. The men, although disbanded for the present, are holding themselves in readiness to return to the front should their services be again required. The majority have returned to the appointments they held before they vacated them in order to go to the front, all of which have been kept open for them by their employers.

An invitation to the municipal banquet at Portsmouth, on Tuesday next, in honour of Captain Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, and the Naval Brigade, has been accepted by the Earl of Northbrook, a former and distinguished First Lord of the Admiralty. But most pleasing of all acceptances of the goodwill of the Mayor and Corporation of our greatest Naval seaport is that of General Sir George White, V.C., whose presence will give additional honour to this most important occasion, when the gallant general officer will meet his late Naval comrades in arms in circumstances that will pleasantly contrast with their trying experiences in Ladysmith.

The United States Naval authorities have decided, after exhaustive trials of oil fuel, that it is not a desirable substitute for coal in vessels of war. We remember in 1868, at Woolwich Yard, shortly before Mr. Gladstone officially sealed the gates of that valuable establishment, trials were carried out in one of the basins for several months with mineral oil in the furnaces of a small steamboat, but did not give satisfaction. After thirty-two years a similar conclusion has been arrived at across the water. There is no chance at present of an abatement in the interest created by the coaling competitions among the ships of the various squadrons.

As previously mentioned in our columns, Lieutenant Malcolm Kennard and Mr. Harris, flag-lieutenant and son respectively of the Naval Commander-in-Chief at the Cape, were recently fined £1 each for ducking an editor at Simon's Town. According to a contemporary, the ladies of Rockhampton, Queensland, have now, as a protest against disparaging H.M.'s Navy, reimbursed them the amount by penny subscriptions, and gone to the expense of telegraphing their action. Rockhampton, with a population of 20,000, is a seaport that is no laggart in the motto "Advance Australia!" and its inhabitants invariably appreciate a visit from a man-of-war. The Navy will not forget the ladies of this flourishing town, who have thus shown their loyalty to the Queen and goodwill to those who disapproved unjust criticism of a distinguished flag-officer.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to Mr. Langman:—"Government, Bloemfontein, April 12, 10 43 a.m., to Langman, 6, Stanhope Terrace, London. I inspected your hospital here yesterday, and congratulate you heartily on the efficient state in which I found it. Its value to our Royal Army Medical Corps and wounded cannot be over-estimated.—ROBERTS."

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir J. E. Commerell, V.C., and Admirals Right Hon. Sir J. Dalrymple-Hay, Bart., and Hon. Armar L. Corry, attended the funeral of the late Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, Governor of Chelsea Hospital, on Saturday last.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Nowell Salmon, V.C., was present last week at Portsmouth when the Powerful arrived. The hero of the Shah Nujiff, Lucknow, November 16, 1857, thus methis younger brethren in arms who, in the gallant defence of Ladysmith, gloriously emulated the example shown them upwards of forty-two years ago by Peel and his daring followers at the siege of the great rebel stronghold in India.

Admiral Sir M. Culme Seymour, Bart., A.D.C., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, and the officers serving under him, entertain Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton and the officers of the Powerful at dinner on Thursday next.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, officially received the captains and officers in command belonging to the Plymouth station on Thursday last, the day after assuming the duties of Port Admiral.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson and Rear-Admirals Atwell Lake and A. D. Fanshawe had the honour of being received by Her Majesty at the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin, on Monday evening last. On Wednesday evening Vice-Admirals Sir Harry Rawson and Sir John Fullerton obeyed commands to dine with the Queen. On Tuesday evening last Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, Rear-Admiral A. D. Fanshawe, and Captain (Rear-Admiral) Sir Baldwin Walker, of the Hannibal, had the honour of attending a concert at the residence of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught.

Vice-Admiral G. D. Morant and Rear-Admirals A. K. Wilson, Controller of the Navy, and A. W. Moore, Junior Naval Lord, were present last week at the banquet of the forty-first annual session of the Institution of Naval Architects. Rear-Admiral Wilson, in returning thanks for the Navy, remarked on the adoption of naval guns at the Cape for land warfare in the comparatively short period of twenty-four hours, in which he recognised the indebtedness of the Navy to naval architects.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East India station, arrived at Trincomalee in his flagship the Eclipse on Monday last.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford has been asked to stand for the City of London at the next general election. Should the present Government remain in office another Session the meeting of Parliament in 1902 would almost coincide with the conclusion of his lordship's present appointment in the Mediterranean Fleet; but we doubt if the noble lord would forego any material portion thereof for the purpose of assuming a seat in the Lower House.

Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd, relieved from Malta Yard, arrived on Saturday last at Portsmouth in the Tyne, and Staff-Paymaster W. Le G. Pullen, secretary to the Port Admiral at Devonport, disembarked from that vessel at Plymouth the previous evening.

Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Harris, Commander-in-Chief at the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station, leaves Simon's Bay shortly in the Doris for the western portion of his command. His visit occurs somewhat late this year, and probably would not have been made in the present state of South African affairs but that matters in the Gold Coast territory possibly need his presence.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, and the officers and men of the Powerful who served under him at Ladysmith, are to be received by the Mayor and Corporation of Portsmouth on Tuesday next, and afterwards entertained at a banquet in the Guildhall.

Captain Anson Schomberg, of the Powerful, left Colombo on Saturday last for Aden and Malta.

Captain W. H. Fawkes, of the Canopus, was honoured with a visit from the Empress Frederick before leaving Spezia last week.

Captain H. N. Dudding, of the Iphigenia, having been relieved by Captain H. C. Reynolds, of the Pique, left Singapore last week for Portsmouth, after three years' service in China.

Captain Leslie Stuart's appointment to the Collingwood immediately after holding the command of the Tauranga is a pleasing recognition by the Admiralty of his good services in Samoa last year, and will be a satisfaction to those who served under him at that period.

Commander C. H. Dare, of the Bellona, temporarily attached to the Mediterranean Fleet, left Gibraltar on Sunday last for Portsmouth to prepare that cruiser for fishery duties off the coast of Iceland.

Commander Sir R. K. Arbuthnot, Bart., of the Royal Sovereign, has compiled a commander's handbook for organisation and routine on board Mediterranean battleships. This should prove a useful vaude mecum for the executive officers of the nine vessels of that class employed "up the Straits."

Commander E. L. Lang, of the Polyphemus, is to return to England to pay off that vessel, and commission the Pyramus, at Chatham, in her place for the Mediterranean station.

Commander Wilford Forrest, who retired with that rank from the Lieutenants' list in January last, left Plymouth on Saturday for Sydney, N.S.W., in the Orient steamship Oroya. In the early part of his career he served as Sub-Lieutenant in Australia and continued on that station until 1895, since when he has been Lieutenant-Commander of the drill ship Durham.

Commander W. H. Nicholson, of the Cossack, left Devonport on Wednesday for the East Indies, to relieve Captain John Denison, of the Melpomene, and convoys the torpedo-boat destroyers Janus and Otter for a portion of their route to the Far East.

Commander (N) H. A. Hatchard, of the Trafalgar, has assumed temporary command of the Admiralty yacht Enchantress during the indisposition of Staff-Captain J. D. Oulless.

Lieutenant F. J. Brooke, late Staff Officer of the Fernon, left Plymouth on Saturday last, in the Orient steamship Oroya, for Sydney, N.S.W., to join the Royal Arthur as Torpedo Officer of the Australian station.

Lieutenant Lionel Halsey, of the Powerful, son of the M.P. for Watford (Herts.), received a most flattering reception when he returned last week to his father's country seat at Hemel Hempstead, after his hard experiences in South Africa.

Sub-Lieutenant J. M. Steele, of the Forte, employed with the Naval Brigade attached to General Sir Redvers Buller's force, was wounded on the 9th inst. at Elandslaagte, but we are glad to say not seriously. The enemy appears on this occasion to have made a target of the Naval Brigade for a short period, but soon received measure for measure from the "handy man."

Midshipman R. C. Hamilton, of the Powerful, son of his lordship the Secretary of State for India, arrived last week at Deal, the Castle of which his distinguished father is Captain, and was received by the Mayor and Corporation of that ancient seaport and municipality. Colonel Commandant A. B. Crosbie, a well-tried soldier, and the officers and men of the Royal Marine Depot, Walmer, were also present, with their band, to welcome the gallant young officer to his home, after enduring the privations of the beleaguered Ladysmith, from which we hope he will soon recover.

Chief Inspector of Machinery J. A. Bedbrook, of the Contractors' Department at the Admiralty, who, as previously mentioned, was going as far as Colombo in the Europa to observe the working of her engines and endeavour to adopt greater economy in the expenditure of fuel, is to continue in that cruiser to Australia and return home in her, instead of leaving the vessel at Point de Galle.

Naval Instructors H. B. Goodwin and Thomas O'Connor retire after more than thirty years' service in that capacity. The former officer displayed considerable ability at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, for upwards of twenty-six years from the period of its adoption for collegiate purposes. The latter officer was most efficient, both in sea-going ships and the Britannia, in the educational training of junior officers, many of whom were highly successful in their subsequent careers.

Paymaster C. F. Pollard's reappointment, on promotion, to the Commander-in-Chief's office at Portsmouth will not be of long duration. It was not unusual in former days for junior Paymasters to enjoy three years under the Port-Admiral's secretary on home stations.

PRIZE DAY IN THE "BRITANNIA."

The prizes awarded at the final examination of the cadets of the Britannia at Dartmouth were on Wednesday distributed by Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport. The Admiral was accompanied on the platform by Captain O'Callaghan, who has recently taken command of the ship.

Mr. G. B. Mason, senior Naval Instructor, in commenting on the recent examination, said that he thought it might be regarded as satisfactory. All the cadets belonging to the fourth term had passed out, and many had distinguished themselves. So many cadets having done well in this examination, 19 passing out as midshipmen, he had avoided the mention of names, but he would like to call attention to the excellent all-round performance of Mr. Kennedy Purvis, who headed the list.

Com. Travers stated that the seamanship report showed that out of a total of 66 cadets examined 31 had obtained first-class certificates, 32 second-class, and the remaining three third-class certificates. On the whole, the results appeared to be satisfactory, the cadets being well up in most of the subjects.

Mr. Sercombe presented the report on the examination in steam and machinery, which he described as satisfactory. The examiner brought to the captain's favourable notice the excellent papers done by several of the cadets. The knowledge of the practical working of the steamboat was throughout satisfactory.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, before distributing the prizes, said that it had given him great pleasure as one of his first duties on assuming the command at Devonport, to be invited by their captain to distribute the prizes. It was still more gratifying because the reports had been so satisfactory. The Chief Naval Instructor's report was everything that could be desired, and the reports from the commander and from the engineer-in-charge were also excellent. The number of those who had passed out first was great, and the number of those who had passed out third was small. They must remember that they were going to have a great deal of responsibility thrown upon them, and as they grew up they would have duties to perform that required a great deal of tact and discretion—duties they could only perform satisfactorily by learning to obey those over them, for then those under them would give them obedience. The great requisite for them was to have self-control. He wished all those passing out a very happy commission in their first ship, and he wished all those coming on might pass out as well as those now going out.

The prizes were then distributed. Mrs. O'Callaghan pinned on the badges of the new chief captains and captains, who are:—Chief captains, Mr. Talbot and Mr. Collins; fourth term captains, Mr. Benson, Mr. Field, Mr. Roberts, and Mr. Chambers; third term captains, Mr. Janvrin, Mr. Kellett, Mr. Scott, Mr. Smyth Pigott, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Whitworth, Mr. Powlett, and Mr. Layard.

Captain O'Callaghan, on behalf of the officers and cadets, thanked the Commander-in-Chief for his kindness in coming there to distribute the prizes. The cadets were always proud to see a distinguished Naval officer there to give them their awards. It gave them something to look forward to and something by which they would always remember passing-out day. He had been so short a time in the ship that he did not like to say much about his own knowledge of the cadets, but in the ship of which he recently had the command there were sixteen midshipmen, many of them just from the Britannia. He noticed that they had benefited very much from their training in that ship; in drawing and mathematics they were uncommonly good. Every term a diploma of honour was awarded to one cadet for gentlemanly conduct and good influence; it was given by the Queen. The winner was selected by popular vote, all the cadets and officers voting, and the best of the three cadets so selected every year received a gold medal. The cadet who received the diploma on leaving this term was Mr. T. M. Barrett, who, he was sorry to say, was among a great number of boys who had got the mumps.

"Food and Cookery"

in an interesting article in its April issue, after describing Harvey's Sauce, and its original manufacture by Mrs. Elizabeth Lazenby, says: "Through succeeding generations her lineal successors have continued the business on the same lines as those originally laid out, and from the original recipe, so that

LIGHT WEIGHT
and HIGH POWER
ARE THE IMPORTANT ITEMS IN SELECTING
A FIELD GLASS FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

AITCHISON'S PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS

ONLY WEIGHS 5 OUNCES, ONLY 1 INCH THICK CLOSED.

The Army and Navy Gazette, Feb. 24th, 1900, says:—"The question of bulk as well as weight should be well considered when selecting a glass for service. Many of the glasses which are now being taken out to South Africa will never be used at all, owing to the nuisance of having a big leather case bumping about on the shoulders. The Patent Pocket Field Glass, however, which Messrs. Aitchison, the opticians, have made, will prove one of the most useful accessories which a scout can possess, as it can be carried readily in the pocket, can be brought into use very quickly owing to the system of rapid focus used, and is at the same time more powerful than many glasses three times its size."

As supplied to the Imperial Yeomanry, Lord Loth's Contingent, Honourable Artillery Company; Several Thousands are now in use in South Africa.

WAR OFFICE, April 20.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned Officer, whose claims have been submitted for Her Majesty's approval, for his conspicuous bravery at the battle of Colenso, as stated against his name:—

Major William Babbie, C.M.G., Royal Army Medical Corps.—At Colenso, on Dec. 15, 1899, the wounded of the 14th and 66th Batteries, Royal Field Artillery, were lying in an advanced donga close in the rear of the guns without any Medical Officer to attend to them, and when a message was sent back asking for assistance, Major W. Babbie, R.A.M.C., rode up under a heavy rifle fire, his pony being hit three times. When he arrived at the donga, where the wounded were lying in sheltered corners, he attended to them all, going from place to place exposed to the heavy rifle fire which greeted anyone who showed himself. Later on in the day, Major Babbie went out with Captain Congreve to bring in Lieutenant Roberts, who was lying wounded on the veldt. This was also under a heavy fire.

Regimental and Presentation Plate.
 "Messrs. E. & E. Emanuel, 3, The Hard, Portsea repaired the whole of the plate of the 2nd. Batn. the Wiltshire Regiment on return from India. The work was done in a most satisfactory and artistic manner. The cost compared favourably with the estimates received from other firms.—P. M. C. 2nd Wiltshire Regiment. August, 1896."
 Watch and Clock Makers.

"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch, No 17,179 of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-76 in the Arctic and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best if not the very best, in the Discovery and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactorily."—M.D., D.I.H., R.N.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-
bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,

THE RAID IN THE ORANGE STATE.

THE great Boer raid to the south, across the right flank of the British army at Bloemfontein, has brought about a series of important and interesting operations culminating on Tuesday night in the flight of the enemy from both Wepener and De Wet's Dorp. The main objects of the Boers in thus sweeping with a sort of haughty defiance past Lord Roberts were not very clearly defined. They were apparently partly predatory, to gather in stores and commander reluctant burghers, partly strategic in the hope of a chance success against the railway, or against British detachments gathering in arms in districts prematurely supposed to have submitted. At length, however, by force of circumstances the enemy's purposes became focussed on a definite object, the capture of Wepener. In the face of daily increasing risk they stubbornly maintained a struggle around that place, in the hope of making prisoners of the gallant Colonial force that for more than a fortnight held its own there against heavy odds. The Boer commandoes taking part in the investment, or facing the approaching relieving columns numbered from 8,000 to 10,000 men with fifteen guns. This powerful force of mounted men had its main body in the vicinity of Wepener, under General Olivier, where it possessed the advantage of interior lines as against the relief columns, while a strong supporting commando, under General De Wet, at De Wet's Dorp, twenty-five miles to the north-west, threatened the left flank of General

Rundle's British division marching across country from Reddersburg to raise the investment. General Rundle's force, advancing by way of Rosendal and Oorlogspoort, came on the 20th inst. in contact with the enemy occupying a strong position across the road four miles to the south-west of De Wet's Dorp. After a brisk engagement, in which the Yeomanry and mounted infantry under General Brabazon bore the chief part, the enemy's position was taken by a turning movement to the east. On Saturday, the 21st, General Rundle entrenched the position he had taken, awaiting the arrival of reinforcements, while his mounted force reconnoitred round the left and rear of the enemy's new position. Owing to the recently prevailing rains the country, which is practically roadless, was extremely heavy for wheeled transport, and General Rundle's progress had not exceeded ten miles a day.

While these events were maturing in the south Mr. Steyn issued from Kroonstad an impassioned appeal to the burghers to maintain the struggle pending relief by the intervention of some great Power, and at all costs to hold the rich grain-producing districts of Wepener, Ladybrand, and Ficksburg. The Boers to the north have hitherto preserved a watchful attitude, their general disposition having gradually assumed the favourite crescent-form until it half encircled Bloemfontein, and reached as far as Leeuwkop, sixteen miles to the south-east of it, covering the movements of troops and convoys passing between Winburg and De Wet's Dorp. A British force, 6,500 strong, posted at Springfield, eight miles east of the capital, kept watch on the enemy eastwards, Meanwhile General Brabant's advance guard reached the enemy's position on Bushman's Kop, eighteen miles south of Wepener, on Saturday evening. He was then between the Caledon River, which is in flood, on the left, and the Basuto border on the right; to the front fairly level ground lay before him to Wepener. The enemy at De Wet's Dorp being in considerable force, Lord Roberts on Sunday despatched General Pole-Carew's (11th) Division from Bloemfontein, with two brigades of cavalry under General French, to assist General Rundle, and take the enemy's position in rear. This column reached Kareefontein and Leeuwkop, south-east of the capital, the same day. Leeuwkop, which the Boers had for some days held in moderate force, was cleared of the enemy, who trekked to the east after offering considerable resistance, leaving a quantity of ammunition and rifles in our hands. The 11th Division with the cavalry continued their advance on Monday as far as Tweede Geluk, some twenty-four miles north-west of De Wet's Dorp without serious opposition. General Brabant's column, co-operating further to the east, had a desultory engagement on Monday with the enemy, holding Bushman's Kop, and commanding thence the left of his line of advance. By a vigorous movement he turned the flank of the Boer position, which was evacuated, and pushed on to a point within eight miles of Wepener, keeping his right close to the Basuto border. During the day the garrison of Wepener had been almost unmolested; but on Tuesday a determined, though futile, assault was made on the northern face of the defences. Still further developments took place on Monday in the reoccupation of the Bloemfontein waterworks at Sanna's Post by General Ian Hamilton's mounted infantry, and the seizure by General Maxwell's Brigade, detached from the 7th Division at Karee Siding, of the hills covering the waggon bridge over the Modder at Kranz Kraal, an important point of passage about eight miles east of the railway. As the enemy still remained in some strength in the hills about Sanna's Post, Lord Roberts despatched the 9th Division eastward in support of General Hamilton. By these movements the various portions of the British army in the Orange State were skilfully disposed, in a manner offering mutual support, over an irregular front of about seventy miles, lying between Karee Siding north of Bloemfontein and Wepener, and facing generally to the north-east the natural line of advance.

On Tuesday General Brabant made but little further advance, the Boers having returned during the night and faced him with a determined front, while they renewed their attack on Dalgety's entrenchments. On the same day General Pole-Carew with the 11th Division made more satisfactory progress. Driving the enemy before him, he reached Roede Kop, fourteen miles from De Wet's Dorp, in the evening, General French's cavalry pushing on further to the east towards the Modder, and halting at Grootfontein, in order next day to get athwart the Boer line of retreat on Thaba N'chu. The result of these dispositions was decisive. On Wednesday morning both De Wet's Dorp and Wepener were found to have been evacuated by the enemy, who were in rapid flight towards Thaba N'chu and Ladybrand. General Chermiside's (3rd) Division at once occupied the former place and General Brabant the latter. Lord Roberts is now free again to move his columns forward, which he will probably do by swinging round his front to the north, pivoting his left on Karee Siding. General Rundle took up the pursuit of the enemy, and no serious opposition was likely to be met with before reaching Thaba N'chu and Ladybrand. Day by day the operations continue. On Wednesday General Ian Hamilton drove the enemy from Israel's Poort beyond Sanna's Post, and advanced on Thursday towards Thaba N'chu. News of a combined attack on that place from both west and south may be hourly expected, as well as of the arrival of Generals French and Brabant before Ladybrand pursuing the flying Boers from Wepener.

While it is pleasant to record the methodical and successful strategy of the past week, it is disappointing that the enemy should have so completely eluded the efforts made for their capture, at least in part. The result, however is what we expected, having regard to the extreme sensitiveness of the Boers about their lines of retreat, and their still superior mobility.

Lord Methuen, acting under orders, drew in on Saturday his advanced force from Zwartkopjesfontein to Boshof, a distance of twelve miles. During the operation his column was fiercely attacked by some 2,000 Boers with guns, and his convoy, which extended over six miles, was in some danger, but its withdrawal was successfully covered by a portion of the Kimberley Mounted Corps and the Yorkshire Hussars. The reason for this movement has not transpired, but it is possible that an attempt may have been intended to cut the force from its base at Kimberley, as a commando was reported on Sunday to be near Frankfort, halfway between Kimberley and Boshof, but a reconnaissance failed to discover any traces of the enemy in that quarter. Lord Methuen, based on Kimberley, remains at Boshof awaiting the turn of events in the south-east, and keeping a watchful eye on the Boer commando in his neighbourhood under the younger Cronje. The Boers at Klipdam have been entrenching their position, which is one of importance, commanding the drifts over the Vaal in the Barkly West district. The enemy are evidently to be found in considerable force along the entire strategical front. According to recent intelligence from Lorenzo Marques they are now credited with a total strength of 80,000, of which 50,000 are in the Orange State, 15,000 in the Fourteen Streams and Klerksdorp districts in the west, and 10,000 in the Biggarsberg and Drakenfels Mountains. The true total strength of the Boer forces will probably never be known, but, judging by their almost ubiquitous character, due in great measure to their marvellous mobility and the force they suddenly develop at every threatened point, it would be unwise to adopt a low estimate of their numbers as a basis in calculating the required strength for their subjugation. The usual plucky message that all was well left Mafeking on the 10th inst. Accounts, however, go to show that the feeling of depression caused by disappointed hopes is on the increase. Apparently no relief column is as yet endeavouring to reach the place from the south, nor has it been possible hitherto to detach a force sufficiently mobile and strong to make its way successfully through the commandoes of the enemy that hold the country north of the Vaal. Hope of relief now rests chiefly on the success attending Sir F. Carrington's expedition from Beira. Time will show whether that hope rests on a sure or a shadowy foundation.

Army Notes.

The publication of the Spion Kop despatches has given the world subject for nine days' wonderment. Parliament has now reassembled, but up to the moment of penning these lines no information is forthcoming as to the reasons which actuated the Government in making the papers public. There has been some talk of moving the adjournment of the House in order to call attention to the matter, but if any members contemplated such a step their scheme has been nipped in the bud by a "blocking" motion placed upon the agenda paper by Mr. James Lowther. But there is a strong feeling, and one, too, that is not confined to Service circles, that the authorities have made a great mistake in publishing the despatches. Of course, it may be that there were reasons behind their action which, when they come to be known, may justify the course taken. Until the Government take the public into its confidence it can hardly complain of being judged by the facts as they appear upon the surface. So far as can be gathered at present, the country has gained nothing by the publication of the despatches, whilst, on the other hand, the publicity that has been given to the mistakes made by some of our generals in the field will scarcely tend to engender that confidence in leaders which is so desirable in an army operating in the field. There is a disposition in some quarters to point to the transfer of Sir Charles Warren from Natal to a high administrative post in another part of South Africa as an explanation of the publication of the despatches, but we need hardly point out that this could easily have been done and the despatches have remained in the pigeon-holes at the War Office. Since the papers, however, have been made public, it is eminently desirable that the Government should make known the reasons for the step, for Mr. Ritchie's statement on Wednesday, that it was a delusion to suppose that it was taken without the consent of Lord Roberts, has only tended to make confusion worse confounded. Until we know more of the matter the public will persist in condemning the course taken. Whilst we say this we must confess to a feeling that the public are themselves rather illogical on this question of despatches. Like Oliver Twist, they insist on asking for more, even though they may not like the food for reflection which has already been doled out to them. Mr. Wyndham was asked in the House on Thursday night whether Lord Roberts had made any comments on the battle of Magersfontein or offered any criticism on the administrative system or military capacity of Lord Methuen. Mr. Wyndham's reply was conclusive. Lord Roberts, he said, had made no comment whatever upon the Magersfontein operations. This answer did not cover quite the whole of the question, but Mr. Wyndham might perhaps have been more explicit if he had been questioned by a more responsible member of the House.

Ministers have so often proved their inability to realise the gravity of the crisis through which the nation is passing that the feebleness of Mr. Long's explanation of the Government's action in publishing the Spion Kop despatches is scarcely a matter of surprise. Instead of clearing away the mystery that surrounds it he only made it deeper than ever. Apparently, with no purpose in view, the public have been invited to discuss military matters of which they are profoundly ignorant. The result is that a great deal of ridiculous nonsense is being talked and written that can be productive of nothing but harm. Mr. Long's generalities are irreproachable, but they are entirely at variance with the actualities of the case. The publication of despatches adversely criticising military operations, is a military commonplace; it is the time chosen for publication which is generally condemned. There was no desire on the part of the public for it, and no desire for the recall of generals from Natal, who, it was felt, were doing their best under particularly difficult conditions. In the circumstances a suspicion is naturally gaining ground that the authorities at home are attempting to divert public attention from their own blundering to blundering in the field. They have made many false moves, but none, we fear, so unfortunate for themselves as this. Whatever mistakes our officers may have committed in South Africa the source of them is, the man in the street says, to be found in Pall Mall. It is a line of argument which it will be difficult to upset in the present state of public feeling. On all grounds we are disposed to think that the publication of Lord Roberts's criticism of generals was a huge mistake.

Mr. Wyndham's statement in the House on Thursday as to the supply of remounts and railway stock in South Africa, and the manner in which this had affected Lord Roberts's advance, was interesting as removing some of the misapprehensions that have existed on this subject. It is an open secret, of course, that the forward march has been materially delayed by the difficulty of finding remounts for the cavalry and mounted infantry, and it is satisfactory to learn, on the authority of the Under-Secretary, that the War Office is not to blame in the matter. Sir Edward Gourley put a string of questions as to the provisions made, not only for ordinary necessities but for the exceptional demands of the campaign, taking it for granted that progress had been retarded by existing deficiencies. Mr. Wyndham declared that nothing in Lord Roberts's communications showed that his strategic movements had been retarded or modified by scarcity of remounts or rolling stock. But he admitted that the officer commanding the line of communications cabled on March 13 that the expenditure of horses had exceeded all estimates. Up to that date the War Office had exceeded all requisitions from South Africa, and since that date had spared no effort to secure horse ships, which Mr. Wyndham calls the factor that governs the problem. He marshalled a formidable array of figures showing that in the last four months 27,041 horses and 17,143 mules have been shipped. The total remounts bought since the beginning of the war amount to some 42,000 horses and more than half as many mules. As for the rolling stock, it would seem from Lord Roberts's account to be very defective, and steps are being taken to procure the necessary supplies. But the peculiar gauge of the South African railways—3ft. 6in.—renders it necessary to make the stock expressly. Having said what was not the cause of delay, Mr. Wyndham, in conclusion, proceeded to say what was. Lord Roberts's chief difficulty, he thought, lay in the fact that he had seized the capital of the Free State by marching and fighting for a month away from the railway. Consequently he has since had to devote a great deal of time to capturing the railway, and after he had captured to repairing it. Then, too, he has had to shift his base from Capetown to Bloemfontein—a distance of 750 miles, with a single line of rails, and defeat the detached parties which threatened his communications. As three of these four objects are attained and the fourth is nearly reached the day of the advance cannot be far distant.

If serious journals publish the private letters to familiar friends and relatives from officers at the seat of war, the editors might surely eliminate passages which can do no good, and must certainly work mischievously when they appear in type and are read by the men. "It is a matter of common knowledge that the present Commander-in-Chief has little or no opinion of artillery, and has hindered its development." That "Commander-in-Chief" is Field-Marshal Viscount Wolsley, and the officer whose off-hand assertion we have quoted would be very hard set indeed if he were called on to make it good. But Lord Wolsley can take no notice of the cool averment that he has hindered the development of our artillery. Why not at once declare that he had opposed smokeless powder and encouraged frontal attacks? A little blue pencil would save us from much snapdragon writing now and then.

The attempt to "reorganize" the Army Service Corps in the middle of the campaign in South Africa is not likely to prove very successful. Up to a few weeks ago nothing but praise of the admirable arrangements of supply and transport was heard. This letters show beyond doubt. The troops appeared to receive their rations and the horses their forage. Since the so-called organization, or rather disorganization, complaints have been many and great. The staff of the Army Service Corps has been harassed and overworked, and so far as we can learn all for no good purpose. The units appear to have had their transport taken away from them, and the medical authorities cut down in their transport for sick and wounded, causing, if half the complaints of staff and regimental officers can be relied upon, much unnecessary suffering and discomfort, whilst naturally the reduced rations to the hard-worked fighting man is a sad deprivation. Again, too, the horses cannot do their work if not fully fed. Rumours say the forage allowance has been perilously low of late for lack of transport to carry it. The recent changes appear to have resulted in disorder, discomfort, and considerable suffering. When the campaign is over there will be doubtless much said on this subject, which at this stage has only been referred to by some of the correspondents at the front. Some of our generals have come under the lash regarding their tactical and strategical defects. It seems that others are equally faulty in their administrative qualifications. To put it plainly there has been in the past an idea only too prevalent in our War Office organization that a man who has proved himself a fairly able office administrator will make an equally good general in the field, and that a man imbued with good notions in strategy will, on the other hand, be a good organiser where a purely business head is essential. This war will possibly teach us to keep two distinct branches—one for administration alone, the other for the more active part requiring constant attention to tactical and strategical knowledge and practice. The two are distinct; hence the Adjutant-General's and Quartermaster-General's branches may, perhaps, with advantage be kept separate both during peace and on service, the latter, of course, being worked by those imbued with business ideas and capacity, but not liable for sudden removal to an active command in the field.

Lieut.-General French is the latest general who has allowed himself to be interviewed, if we may rely upon the statements of a war correspondent. This interviewing of generals holding commands in the field is a new feature, and is calculated to do so much mischief that we trust it will be discouraged in every possible way. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that General French would have committed himself to such reckless statements as he is credited with having done. If he did, we can only say that he must be a far less able commander than most people believe him to be. It is considered bad enough when an officer occupying the position of commander-in-chief of an army in the field ventilates his views in official despatches as to the conduct of officers serving under him. But here we have General French represented as having taken a newspaper correspondent fully into his confidence as to what he thought ought to have been done in the earlier stages of the war. General French is credited by the correspondent of the Morning Post with having said:—

"I think we ought to have fought a battle against the Free Staters before Elands Laagte, instead of sending out the Natal Volunteers to skirmish along the line between Bester's Station and Acton Homes. We ought to have occupied Surprise Hill early in the week after Elands Laagte. By so doing we would have averted the Nicholson's Nek disaster, for if retreat had been found necessary we would not have lost so many men in the retreat. Moreover, we could from Observation Hill have prevented the Boers from cutting off that retreat. I am not sure that we should not also have occupied Pepworth Hill. Certainly we should have prevented the Boers from occupying it, and setting up the embrasure for 'Long Tom'."

If General French did say these things it was very foolish of him, but we are disposed to think that there is a mistake somewhere, for we cannot bring ourselves to believe that, even if he made known his ideas so freely, he intended them for publication. We have had our attention drawn to the matter by several correspondents, who ask whether it is wise for officers in high command to commit themselves to utterances of this kind. We say unhesitatingly that it is not, for we fail to see any possible advantage which can accrue either to the public or the army in the field. But before General French is condemned it is only right and proper that he should be given an opportunity of defending himself, for his explanation would doubtless put an entirely different construction on matters.

At the close of the year 1854 there was a small "set" made in the direction of the Crimea by the wandering Britishers on their travels in the East, or in their pleasant business of wandering about Europe or the shores of the Mediterranean, and the current became fuller in the spring and summer of the following year, but it was never so full and wide as to need official notice or remonstrance. The "T. G's" were officers retired, or "half-pays" who had friends and regiments at the front, and who generally brought with them "recommendations" in boxes and cases of very welcome additions to the messes of their hosts. There were no women among the immigrants except a "sister" or two coming with father or brother to see a military relation. An intrepid wife like Mrs. Duberly, or Mrs. Wrottesley, and the nurses, banked up and settled lower down on the Bosphorus, content with an advanced post at Balaklava. There was a camp, but there were no quarters for womankind on the plateau of Sebastopol. Lord Raglan had one or two—one certainly—at his house who came out with her father, and there were other chance visitors—every one remembers the fair lady whose "case" made such a noise a few years later—but there was no "run" on the siege or the plateau of Sebastopol by the fashionable world. In the Peninsula war "excursions and alarms" at certain epochs of the struggle occurred, but towards "the bitter end" "the gentle sex" was represented by ladies of the Moll Flanders type.

Gortschakoff's position on the Alma was within an easy drive of the north side, and there was a great gathering of Russian ladies and civilians there before the battle of September 20, but they were in full flight for the city before two o'clock that day, just as our fair countrywomen left Brussels the day before Waterloo. In the time of the Grande Monarque headquarters were in much favour among the élite of the beau monde, and the high ridge over Centreville, on the road to Richmond was crested by the carriages and vehicles of senators and others who came from Washington to witness the battle of Bull Run on July 21, 1861, which did not answer their expectations. Whenever a great military operation is expected to take place near a town of an invaded territory, there was sure to be always a daring, hopeful exodus of the inhabitants formerly, but long-range projectiles, smokeless powder, &c., bid fair to check such adventures in future for all but Bellonas of the Lady Sarah Wilson type. The great flight to the Cape against which Sir Alfred Milner has entered a gentlemanlike remonstrance, backed up by the approval of the Commander-in-Chief, was due to the special and peculiar circumstances of the war, and if the authorities were really inconvenienced by the multitudes of distinguished mothers, wives and sisters who made their way to the Cape and Natal they really were to blame for their tardy recognition of it. There was the example of the action of the Government of India in 1857 for them to follow. The horrors of the Mutiny, greatly exaggerated by the British Press, moved the country to its depths. The wives and sisters of officers and civilians, consulting nothing but their courageous hearts, took ship for Hindustan, but when they arrived at Calcutta they were informed that they would not be allowed to go up country beyond certain stations which were well within our lines, and the general results, apart from some dissatisfaction and disappointment, were beneficial.

The cumbersome nomenclature of corps to-day is hard on printers and public—one man's name may with the official adjuncts run over two lines of print in a gazette, e.g., "3rd Batn. Imperial Yeomanry, 9th Co. Yorkshire Hussars, Private 590 John Smith." Thirty or forty similar entries make a large indent on a column. The effect is as unpleasant to the eye as it is embarrassing to a reader in search of some particular name.

The Queen's review of the Naval Brigade from the Channel Squadron and the troops of the Dublin District in the Phoenix Park on Saturday last was a great success. The weather was perfect—proverbial Queen's weather. There were 8,000 men on parade. This was the first occasion on which a Naval Brigade has taken part in a review in the Irish capital. Their marching and bearing were excellent, and they were warmly applauded. The 21st Lancers, of course, received an ovation. It was a spectacle such as Dublin delights in—or it would be more correct to say all Ireland, for there were contingents from all quarters present, special trains being run, and thousands taking advantage of them. Experts have calculated that there was not less than 150,000 spectators. Never has the Fifteen Acres held such a vast concourse of people. Both on arriving at and leaving the review ground Her Majesty was accorded a demonstration of respect and affection. It will be many a year in fact, before Ireland forgets the Queen's review of 1900, the presence of the Duke of Connaught in command of the troops having added greatly to the importance of the ceremony.

The report of the Royal Commission on Indian expenditure, with a minority report, signed by Sir W. Wedderburn, M.P., Mr. W. S. Caine, and Mr. D. Naoroji, has been presented to Parliament. On the whole the document must be regarded as satisfactory, although those will be grievously disappointed who had anticipated any sweeping military reforms as the result of the protracted investigations. With the financial details of the report, generally speaking, we have little to do. It has been many times complained that the Civil administration in India is altogether too costly, but under this head the Commissioners can find apparently no justification for the charge. They do, however, consider that advantage might be derived by a reconsideration of the pension system. But, on the whole, they have not been able to find any reasonable cause for alarm. It is really in the charges more directly under the head of military expenditure that which we are most interested. Here the Commissioners are satisfied to a great extent with matters as they stand. The general principles laid down more than a quarter of a century ago are not disputed, but the Indian Government has put forward a plea for liberal and indulgent treatment. It is contended with regard to the Army that the cost of recruiting is excessive, that short service has increased the cost of British troops in India for transport and in other ways, that India, in maintaining an army of Europeans, confers greater benefits on the Imperial Government than she receives, and that the supremacy of England in the East is upheld solely by the army India supports. The Commissioners do not deny that theoretically there are some substantial grounds for these complaints. They have gone very carefully into the facts, and have throughout been rather biassed in favour of India, as it was their duty to be in all circumstances; but, on the whole, they are obliged to allow that the system as it stands is a fair one on the whole. They argue rather in this way: The present arrangement cuts two ways. At first sight it may seem to be unfair to the Indian taxpayer that he should be called upon to bear a share of the burden of home charges which do not actually affect him or promote his interests. But, on the other hand, it would be less difficult and expensive for the Home Government to provide for the military requirements of the Empire if India did not make such large demands. The men which India takes must be the best. India determines the quantity and character of the troops required, and the Home Government settles the terms on which they are to be supplied. It will be agreed by all intelligent men that India would be worse off than she is now if she had to organise her defence independently. It is acknowledged, however, that, under the present system, arrangements which were fair twenty or thirty years ago have, in certain respects, become unduly burdensome to India. The Commissioners lean in favour of a revision of the capitation rate, and until that measure is adopted they are of opinion that half the cost of the transport of British troops to and from India might be borne by the Imperial Government. There ought to be no difficulty in readjusting matters to this extent. There is one thing that the Commissioners have done; they have refused to entertain any proposals for creating a local European Army for India. The disadvantages of such a scheme would be so many and so overwhelming that it is better, it is considered, for India to pay more and have its European Army in touch, as far as possible, with European military progress.

A very important change has been sanctioned affecting the Native Army in India. It has been decided to substitute a double company for the existing wing organisation. Proposals to this effect recently sent home by the Government of India have been approved by the Secretary of State, and the change is to be carried into effect forthwith. It may be remembered that both Sir Donald Stewart and Lord Roberts, when Commander-in-Chief, advocated the double-company system, and Sir William Lockhart also took the matter up. The plan was strongly supported by Sir Edwin Collen, the result being that the point is at last gained. Under the new system the first double company will be under the second in command, the second under the next senior officer, the present wing commander, and the third and fourth under the present two senior wing officers. Those officers not in command of double companies and in excess of the adjutant will be styled double-company officers. The status of native officers is not affected. The new organisation is similar to that in the Native Cavalry which works so well. As regards pay, the present contract allowance, 85 rs. to each wing commander, will be divided between the double company commanders, 42-8 rs. per mensem. Officers now in receipt of higher Staff pay in their present appointments than what is proposed under the new scheme will continue to be paid the existing rates until promoted. The advantages of the new system are so great that the wonder is it should have taken so long to recognise them.

In the Gazette of Friday last a number of Militia officers are stated to have been granted "the temporary rank of Captain whilst serving in South Africa." "The temporary rank of Captain in what?" it is naturally asked. They had the rank of Captain already. One of them, Major Hayes-Sadler, 3rd Batn. King's Own Light Infantry, is a Major of 1894. Our military arrangements are peculiar. What is the position of those Militia officers who are serving with their battalions in South Africa? Is their rank temporary? Are the officers gazetted last Friday in a better or worse position? They are doing duty with Line battalions it is true; but Militia officers do not seem quite to understand what their real status is, and we do not wonder at it. There ought to be some better understanding. Let us hope this will come when the war is over and we have time to take its lessons to heart. Our system stands in need of improvement in many respects, and it is certainly due to the Militia officers who are doing duty with their own regiments in the field that they should be made aware how they really stand as regards the many officers with whom they are brought in contact. If difficulties arise the fault will not rest with them, but with those who have allowed them to remain very much in doubt as to what they are and what authority others have a right to exercise over them.

Major the Hon. Lieut.-Colonel C. K. Brooke is in Tuesday's Gazette appointed to the command of the Royal Irish Reserve Regiment. This is the officer who, as Lieutenant-Colonel and Honorary Colonel Brooke, for years commanded the 3rd Batn. East Yorkshire Regiment, and on retirement permitted to retain his rank and wear the uniform of the battalion. Is Colonel Brooke's service for years as a Militia Commanding Officer to stand for nothing? Militia officers are anxious to obtain an explanation. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that it could be good for anybody when things are left in such a hopeless state of muddle.

The monthly Army List can scarcely be considered an up-to-date publication. The Dress and Equipment Committee at Aldershot, according to this month's list, is thus composed:—President, Colonel C. W. H. Douglas, A.D.C.; members, Colonel T. C. Porter, 6th Dragoon Guards, R. F. N. Clarke, A.O.D., Lieut.-Colonels C. A. Rochfort-Boyd, G. M. Bullock, 2nd Batn. Devonshire Regiment, W. B. Allin, R.A.M.C., and Majors Sir G. V. Thomas, R.H.A., and O. J. H. Batn. Welsh Regiment; with Major G. P. Ellison, Royal Warwickshire Regiment, as Secretary. As most of these officers left for South Africa in October last and are still serving there—one of them is a prisoner of war at Pretoria—it is about time that their names were removed from column 50. At present the Army List is quite misleading.

A notice appeared in the Thames District orders yesterday:—"Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to accept the services of a battalion of Volunteer Rifles, with an establishment of eight companies, with headquarters at Chatham, to be recruited from the towns of Strood, Rochester, Chatham, and New Brompton, and to be designated the 4th Volunteer Battalion of the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment. The raising and equipment of the corps will be proceeded with forthwith." Mr. Charles T. C. James, of The Mount, Frindsbury, has been appointed to command the battalion, he having had previous experience as a Volunteer officer.

Saturday, April 21.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to the War Office:—"Rundle's force came in contact with the enemy yesterday (Friday) four miles south-west of Dewetsdorp. They occupied a strong position covering the town. The Yeomanry and Mounted Infantry seized another position, which enabled Rundle to drive the enemy off and to occupy the high ground they had been holding. Rundle advanced this morning early and is now again engaging with the enemy. Our casualties yesterday were two men severely, and one officer, Lieut. O'Connor, R.E., and seven men slightly wounded." Gen. Rundle's force consisted of the 3rd and 8th Divisions.

Lord Methuen's force reported to have returned to Boshof from Zwartkopjesfontein. During its retirement it was attacked by a Boer force of over 2,000, with guns, but the attack was repelled with inconsiderable loss on our side, and the convoy of 136 waggons attached to the column was brought safely into Boshof. The capture of the convoy was prevented by the determination of the mounted men, consisting of the Kimberley Mounted Corps and the Yorkshire Hussars (Yeomanry), who held the enemy in check for over three hours on kopjes two and a half miles away from the column. The Boers were led by a foreigner, and fought with great dash and spirit. The Boer fire was very heavy, but our men were well under cover. The enemy's loss was heavy. On one occasion they approached so close to our men that they were heard talking. The Times correspondent states the day's work was most creditable to all concerned.

A commando of Boers to-day advanced through Wessel's Nek, crossed Sunday's River and occupied a ridge held by our Infantry a fortnight ago. Later in the day they shelled the Elands Laagte colliery. There was also some skirmishing on our left and a general show of activity in the Boer trenches, but there have been no developments on the Natal side since, and the week has been uneventful so far as Sir Redvers Buller's force is concerned.

Sunday, April 22.

Lord Roberts to-day despatched the 11th Division, under Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew, consisting of the 18th and 21st Brigades (Major-Gens. Stephenson and Maxwell), and two Cavalry Brigades under Lieut.-Gen. French, to assist Gen. Rundle. The column marched to Karreefontein without much opposition, and reported casualties amounting to two men killed, one officer and 19 men wounded, and one officer and 10 men missing. Gen. Rundle to-day occupied positions south of De Wets Dorp, the Boers being in great force. He had to report to Lord Roberts that out of 53 men of the 1st Batn. Worcestershire Regt. despatched on outpost duty after dark only 18 had returned. The men, as it turns out, lost their way in the dark and walked into the enemy's lines.

Monday, April 23.

According to despatch from Lord Roberts received at the War Office Major-Gens. Brabant and Hart turned to-day the position occupied by the enemy—who tried to prevent their moving northwards—and got into telegraphic communication with Col. Dalgety, who reported all well at Wepener. At 1 o'clock this relieving column was within about eight miles of Wepener. The 11th Division, under Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew, and Lieut.-Gen. French's two brigades of cavalry reached Tweede-Geluk in the afternoon without encountering serious opposition. Helio-graphic communication was established with Lieut.-Gen. Rundle. The mounted infantry under Major-Gen. Hamilton to-day occupied the waterworks at Sanna's Post. As the enemy were occupying the neighbouring hills in some strength, the 9th Division was sent to support Gen. Hamilton. A brigade of the 7th Division moved eastward and seized the hills commanding the waggon bridge over the Modder at Kranz Kraal.

Tuesday, April 24.

Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew's Division reached Roode Kop during the evening without any casualties. Its advance was covered by the cavalry and horse artillery, which drove back the enemy with, it is said, heavy loss. The mounted troops had halted for the night at Grootfontein, and in the early morning were crossing the Modder at Valsbank, with a view to placing themselves across the enemy's line of retreat; but Gen. French's arrival near the river had evidently alarmed the Boers, for they evacuated their position near Dewetsdorp during the night, and it was occupied in the morning by Lieut.-Gen. Chermiside's troops. The mounted infantry, under Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton, drove the enemy off all the kopjes in the neighbourhood of the waterworks without sustaining any casualties. The Highland Brigade marched 24 miles to support Gen. Hamilton, and halted for the night at Klip Kraal, four miles from Sanna's Post. Lord Roberts stated in a despatch received early on Wednesday morning that Major-Gens. Hart and Brabant were still a few miles short of Wepener; but in a later telegram he reported that the Boer force investing that place had made off by the Ladybrand Road. The investment of Wepener was thus ended, and Lord Roberts has acknowledged the gallantry and devotion of the Colonial troops.

A smokeless powder magazine in Johannesburg was blown up during the evening. Thirteen men were killed, and about fifty injured. The cause of the disaster is not known.

Wednesday, April 25.

Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton, with his mounted infantry division, to-day drove the enemy from a strong position at Israel's Poort, a point, presumably, between Sanna's Post and Thaba N'chu. The Boers were dislodged by a turning movement, stated to have been "admirably carried out by Brigd. Gen. Ridley, with the 2nd Brigade of Mounted Infantry, and Major-Gen. Smith-Dorrien, with the 11th Infantry Brigade." Our losses were very slight. The Boer left was outflanked, and the enemy in their retreat were compelled to cross an open plain, exposed to the fire of our artillery. Here they suffered considerably. Gen. Brabant himself had a narrow escape during the engagement. He, it is said, "led his troops with characteristic skill and gallantry."

These troops continued their march in the direction of Thaba N'chu, where a mountain was occupied which, unofficial accounts say dominates the Ladybrand district. The Boers from De Wet's Dorp appear to be retreating towards that point, actively pursued by Gen. French's Cavalry, and the Imperial Yeomanry attached to Lieut.-Gen. Rundle's Division, the 8th. It is feared that the Boers may, after all, succeed in escaping, but their withdrawal will, at least, clear the right flank of Lord Roberts's Army, and secure his line of communications.

Lord Roberts to-day received "good news" from Col. Baden-Powell up to the 10th inst. Col. Baden-Powell has prophesied that the relief of the town shall be a birthday gratification for her Majesty the Queen. Capt. MacLaren, who was seriously wounded in the recent fighting, is making good progress.

Thursday, April 26.

Nonewsas to the movements of Gens. French, Pole-Carew, Rundle, and Chermiside to-day. At the War Office the impression was that the pursuit of the Boers from the south would prove ineffective, as the enemy it was feared had obtained too good a start; but it is believed that the operations of the last few days will have an excellent effect, as showing that Lord Roberts intends to keep any armed forces in the neighbourhood of his headquarters moving. Our troops are reported to be in the best of spirits.

Friday, April 27.

Kimberley seems to be filling up with troops, for the regiments of the 10th Division, under Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Hunter, are gradually arriving. The presumption is that as soon as all is ready, a column will move northwards towards Mafeking. It was recently hinted that important events might be looked for on the Vaal immediately. If a force from the south is really, at last, going to march towards Mafeking, it will account for much that is now shrouded in mystery.

Bushof is neither surrounded nor occupied by the Boers. Lord Methuen is still there, and some officers and a squadron of Kimberley Volunteers have arrived without encountering any opposition.

The amount of the Mansion House Widows' Fund has been brought up to £889,300 and the Daily Telegraph to 3,174,366 shillings. The latter fund has done excellent work, and well deserves support, as it gives assistance at once to deserving cases. Up to the present 326 widows have had annuities of £15 provided.

When Sir George White called on Prince Christian the latter is said to have asked, "I don't suppose I will have my boy" (Prince Christian Victor) home for twelve months, shall I?" "Oh, yes; I think the war will be over in three months," was the reply.

From various quarters news is to hand showing that the burghers are becoming disheartened. The Times correspondent reports that there is such anxiety on the part of some of the commandoes to return home that the Volksstem recommends that vigorous steps shall be taken to put an end to the clamour for leave. The Australians near Bloemfontein lately brought in two prisoners, and these men also said that the burghers are sick of the war.

All our troops have been rapidly re-equipped with boots, clothing, and accoutrements, and Lord Kitchener has made various changes of organisation which were found to be necessary.

The rumours as to the new employment for Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Warren were set at rest to-day by the official announcement that Sir Charles has been appointed Military Administrator of Griqualand West. It is a position for which he is admirably suited.

Army Personal.

The Duke of Cambridge has returned to England from the Continent.

General Sir Neville B. Chamberlain, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., Bengal Infantry, who has been appointed Field Marshal in the vacancy caused by the death of Sir Donald Stewart, was born four years earlier than the officer whom he succeeds in the rank, and joined the Indian Army as long ago as February 24, 1837. His war services include the Afghan War, 1839-42 (wounded on six different occasions, medal for Ghuznee, and medal inscribed "Candahar, Ghuznee, and Cabul, 1842"). Was present with the Governor General's Body Guard at the Battle of Maharajpore, December 29, 1843 (bronze star); served in the Sikh War of 1848-9, including actions of Chillianwallah and Goojerat (medal with two clasps). At Delhi, during the Mutiny, he was Adjutant-General of the besieging army (severely wounded in the sortie of July 18, when he was carried to his tent by his orderly officer, Mahomed Hyat Khan, who afterwards served under Lord Roberts). For his Mutiny services he was made a C.B. and A.D.C. to the Queen. When in command of the Punjab Frontier Force led several expeditions against the frontier tribes, including the Ambeyla Expedition, 1863 (severely wounded). In 1875 he was appointed to the command of the Madras Army; and three years afterwards he was selected by Lord Lytton to proceed on a mission to Afghanistan. The refusal of the Ameer Shere Ali to receive the British Envoy led to the last Afghan war. After holding for a time the post of Military Member of Council, Sir Neville Chamberlain, who had been created a K.C.B. and K.C.S.I., retired in 1886.

Probate has been granted at Calcutta to Lady Mary Caroline Lockhart for the will of the late General Sir William Lockhart, the estate being valued at 1,17,000Rs.

Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Carrington, when he approaches Mafeking from Rhodesia, will not find an unknown country before him, as General Buller did when advancing to the relief of Ladysmith. General Carrington knows almost every mile of the ground over which he will operate. He has shot big and small game round about Mafeking years ago, and at one time kept a pack of foxhounds in the district. The appearance of a large force from the north commanded by such an experienced officer in South African warfare as Sir Frederick Carrington is not unlikely to have an important bearing on the ultimate result of the campaign. The wonder is that this was not recognised earlier.

Major-General R. F. Butler attains the age limit, and will be placed on the retired list on the 11th prox.

Major-General E. D. Elliott, R.A., will be placed on the retired list on the 14th prox., when he will have been five years unemployed, and on the same day Major-General T. M. Hazlerigg, R.A., will have put in his term of non-employment.

Major-General J. F. Maurice, C.B., R.A., will preside on Monday next, at 3 p.m., at the Royal United Service Institution, when a discussion will take place on the paper read recently by Colonel Sir Howard Vincent, C.B., M.P., "Personal Observation and Impressions of the Forces and Military Establishments in South Africa." The discussion is proposed to be divided under fourteen distinct heads, a synopsis of which has been prepared.

The announcement in last week's Gazette of the removal of the commanders of the 1st and 2nd Brigades of General French's cavalry division—of Major-Generals Brabazon and Babington—has evoked a considerable amount of comment. Facts, however, have been created for both these officers in the Imperial Yeomanry, and their places in the cavalry division have been supplied by Colonels Porter, Carabiniers, and Broadwood, 12th Lancers. General Babington loses his local rank of Major-General. It would be interesting to know the cause for these changes, and what necessity has arisen for the posting of the two former officers to the Yeomanry, which force already has an abnormally large number of superior officers serving with it.

Colonel (temporary Major-General) T. B. Tyler becomes a Major-General on the Establishment, in consequence of the retirement on Monday next of Lieut.-General B. L. Forster, R.A.

Only two Colonels on the active list come under the age rule next month. These are Colonels A. G. H. Church, late of the Manchester Regiment, on May 1, and M. S. Bell, V.C., C.B., R.E., on May 15.

Colonel C. E. Beckett, C.B., late 3rd Hussars, who was seriously wounded at the Battle of Glencoe, and lying ill at Dundee when the Boers occupied the place, is now on his way home, having left Cape Town on the 7th inst. in the Nubia.

Colonel C. Conor, retired list, late Duke of Wellington's Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the 2nd Batn. Royal Northern Reserve Regiment.

Colonel L. R. Stopford-Sackville, retired list, late of the Rifle Brigade, has assumed command of the 2nd Royal Eastern Counties Battalion in process of formation at Aldershot.

Colonel J. G. Kelly, C.B., I.S.C., has vacated his appointment as Colonel on the Staff in India, and returns to England on leave pending retirement, as he reaches the age limit on November 28.

Lieut.-Colonel J. A. Lambert, half pay, late 2nd Dragoon Guards, has been appointed to the command of Her Majesty's Royal Dragoon Reserve Regiment, which is in course of formation at York, as from the 18th inst.

Lieut.-Colonel H. V. Cowan, R.A., has been selected by Lord Roberts to fill the position of Military Secretary on his staff at Bloemfontein vice Major-General Sir William Nicholson, Captain A. C. M. Waterfield taking his place as Assistant Military Secretary. Captain Lord H. A. Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 3rd Batn. Royal Scots, becomes A.D.C., vice Captain Waterfield, and Lieutenant H. Wake, 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifles, has been appointed A.D.C., vice Colonel Lord Downe.

The military authorities would make a very happy selection in appointing Lieut.-Colonel John Ross, of Bladensburg, C.B., to the command of the battalion of Irish Guards. He is an officer of the highest attainments, and possesses every qualification for this important command. He is an Irish gentleman who holds the faith of the majority of his countrymen. The grandson of a distinguished Peninsula general—one of Wellington's hard fighting officers, who is said to have "had an instinct for war, and who could grasp, in an instant, the most critical point in a battle." After a service of five years as a subaltern in the Royal Artillery, Lieut.-Colonel Ross was transferred to the Coldstream Guards. He was promoted Captain in 1885 and Major in 1889. He was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel on half-pay in July, 1896. He is a graduate of the Staff College. In 1876 he won the gold medal of the Royal United Service Institution. He has been secretary to several important financial and diplomatic missions. He commanded the mounted infantry detachment of the Guards at Suakim in 1885, and was present at the action at Hasheen, attack on the convoy on March 24, also at the actions at Thakool and Tamai. A keen and capable officer, it has surprised those who know him that he should, in the present crisis, have been relegated to a secondary staff appointment at Aldershot. But his absence from the theatre of war may now, perhaps, be explained.

Lieut.-Colonel N. P. O'Gorman, late Lincolnshire Regiment, has been granted an extension of his appointment as D.A.A.G. for six months from the 18th inst.

Brevet Lieut.-Colonel H. S. Walker, Scottish Rifles, has been appointed a Staff Captain, Military Intelligence, Headquarters.

Major A. W. Money, R.A., has been appointed a D.A.A.G. at Lord Robert's Headquarters in South Africa, and Captain J. G. Baldwin, R.A., D.A.A.G., on staff of the lines of communication.

Major Sir Claude MacDonald has been seriously ill at Pekin. He was taken ill a fortnight ago, and for some days his condition was critical, as he was suffering from pleurisy and pneumonia. Fortunately the turn came in time, and by the last accounts he was well on the way towards recovery.

Major H. Earle, D.S.O., 2nd Batn. King's Own Light Infantry, has succeeded to a baronetcy by the death of his father, Sir Thomas Earle, who died on the 13th inst. at Allerton Tower, Woolton, Liverpool. The Earles have been connected with Liverpool for over two centuries. Several have been mayors of the borough—one as early as 1709—while one was second mayor of the reformed corporation. Sir Thomas Earle was brother of the late Major-General William Earle, who was killed in the Soudan in February, 1885. Major Earle, the new baronet, served in the Jowaki campaign, the Afghan war, the Egyptian campaign of 1882, the Burma war, and the Tirah expedition, in which he was severely wounded. He married in 1891 a daughter of the late Major Boileau, 61st Regiment.

A correspondent drew attention some time ago to the distinguished heroism of Major W. Babbie, R.A.M.C., at the battle of Colenso on December 14, when he attended to the wounded on the battlefield regardless of all danger, though under a hot fire from time to time, and afterwards went out also under a hot fire and brought in Lieutenant the Hon. F. S. Roberts, who was lying wounded. Major Babbie has been granted the Victoria Cross. An eye-witness of the officer's gallantry, and an old friend, writes to us: "I am delighted that this noble-minded man is thus decorated with the cross 'For Valour,' and I can but hope that he may long be spared to wear his honour. He is a credit to the profession of arms. This I say because I witnessed his acts of bravery, and well know how splendid his achievements were." Major Babbie is a Scotchman, the son of Mr. J. Babbie, J.P., of Dumbarton. After finishing his education at Glasgow University, he joined the Army in 1880 and served in India, Malta, and Crete. For a year he acted as Senior Medical Officer in the latter island, and received the C.M.G. for his services in connection with the international occupation of Crete.

Captain J. M. Middlemist, 3rd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders, was in command of the first portion of the force sent to the relief of Kumasi last week. He has been associated with the Gold Coast Constabulary since July, 1892, and has previously been noted for his zeal and ability, which will, no doubt, in due course be recognised.

Captain R. P. Whatley, retired list, late Royal Sussex Regiment, is appointed a temporary Brigade-Major at Aldershot.

THE ORDNANCE FACTORIES.

The annual accounts of the Ordnance Factories for the year 1898-99, with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General, have just been issued as a Blue-book. In his report Mr. Mills observes, with regard to the centralization of accounts :—

During recent years I have drawn the attention of the War Office to the unsatisfactory distribution of certain Building Works Department charges. It was, however, stated that the necessary changes could not be conveniently effected until the accounts of the Building Works Department were transferred to the Central Office. This transfer was to some extent carried out from April 1, 1898, the weekly abstracts of wages and materials for the year having been posted to cost ledgers in the Central Office. At the close of the year, however, the final figures for incorporation in the production statement were taken from the accounts which the Building Works Department had continued to keep as heretofore, and I have been informed by the War Office that the transfer of the accounts to the Central Office had "not been carried out as anticipated." There would thus appear to have been an unnecessary duplication of account-keeping throughout the year 1898-99, which, so far as I am aware, has not been discontinued.

Referring to the loss on the manufacture of powder Mr. Mills says that his attention has been drawn to a charge against the Navy of £3,980 for "Expenditure on experimental manufacture of S.B.C. powder," and he explains that :—

This sum represents the difference between £7,169 8s. 7d., the actual cost of manufacture of special S.B.C. powder, which was rejected at proof, and £3,182 8s. 7d., the value of the rejected powder as material for the manufacture of Prism Brown Powder, to which it was decided to convert it. With reference to the description of this charge as "experimental," it may be noticed that the Ordnance Factories invited an order from the Navy to manufacture this powder, and that it was not until a large quantity had been produced and rejected that it was found that they were not able to execute the order successfully. It would, therefore, seem that the sum of £3,980 should have been regarded as a loss on manufacture.

In conclusion, Mr. Mills reports that the total of the stores in stock at the various ordnance factories on March 31, 1899, was £564,697 13s. 8d., an increase of £36,438 8s. 11d. during the year. Of this amount £14,800 is regarded as a permanent increase of stock, and has been covered by a transfer of that amount from the supplies suspense account.

THE IRISH GUARDS.—Arrangements are being made for a large and very attractive bill, inviting men to enlist in the new Regiment of Irish Guards, to be posted in the Metropolis and in other places where it may draw Irish recruits. The poster, printed in green on a white ground, with the Royal Arms at the top and the shamrock at the four corners, recites the Queen's desire "to commemorate the bravery shown by the Irish regiments in the recent operations in South Africa," and her Majesty's "command that an Irish Regiment of Foot Guards be formed." The age and standard of recruits are to be as for other regiments of Foot Guards:—Age, 18 to 25 years; minimum height, 5ft. 7in. for men under 20 years of age, and 5ft. 8in. for men of 20 years and over; chest measurement varying with the height. Only men of good character are invited to join, and recruits on enlistment will be sent to the Guards' Depot at Caterham.

Major-Gen. Robert Talbot, Colonel, retired list, R.A., died at Stone House, Bearstead, Kent, on the 24th inst., aged 80. He joined the Army June 6, 1838; became Captain May 28, 1847; Major Oct. 26, 1858; Lieutenant-Colonel May 23, 1859; Colonel May 23, 1864; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Sept. 30, 1868.

Major-Gen. Francis Maurice Haultain, Colonel, retired list I.S.C., died at Peterborough, Canada, on the 3rd inst., aged 81. He joined the Army Aug. 20, 1840; became Captain August 20, 1855; Major Feb. 18, 1861; Lieutenant-Colonel Aug. 20, 1866; Colonel Aug. 20, 1871; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Nov. 25, 1874. He served in the Southern Mahuratta Campaign 1844-45, and was present at the taking of the Budderghur; at the storm and capture of the forts of Punulla and Pownghur; the investment and occupation of the forts of Munohur and Munsuntosghur; and at an attack on the gateway of Munohur, where he was severely wounded.

Col. Thomas Harper Colvill, J.P., died at Overdale, Shortlands, on the 15th inst., aged 81. He was formerly Captain in the 71st Highland Light Infantry, and after retiring by sale of his commission commanded for several years the 39th, now 21st, Middlesex (Finsbury) R.V.

Col. Sir Francis Arthur Marindin, K.C.M.G., of Craigflower, Dunfermline, retired list, R.E., died at 3, Hans Crescent on the 21st inst. Sir Francis, who was Senior Inspecting Officer of Railways, Board of Trade, was born at Weymouth, May 1, 1838. He was the second son of the late Rev. S. Marindin, of Chesterton, Shropshire. Educated at Eton and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, he entered the Royal Engineers in 1854. From 1860 to 1863 he was A.D.C. and Private Secretary to Sir William Stevenson, Governor of Mauritius, during which period he was also employed on special duty in Madagascar. From 1866 to 1868 he was Adjutant at the Chatham School of Military Engineering, and in 1869 was appointed Brigade-Major. In 1872 he obtained his Majority, and, after vacating his Staff appointment at Chatham in 1874, he joined the Board of Trade in 1877 as an Inspecting Officer of Railways. In 1879 he retired from the Royal Engineers as a Major, but later renewed his association with the Army as a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Engineer and Railway Volunteer Staff Corps. As an official of the Board of Trade he was enabled to render valuable service to the travelling community in bringing about many needed reforms. In 1887 Major Marindin, having rendered important services in connection with the Egyptian State Railways, was made a C.M.G., and in 1897, on the occasion of the Jubilee, was promoted to the Knighthood of the Order. Sir Francis Marindin married, in 1860, a daughter of Sir William Stevenson, K.C.B., on whose personal staff he served three years in Mauritius. The funeral took place at noon on Thursday at Craigflower, Torryburn, Dunfermline, Fifeshire. The principal mourners included Mr. E. Marindin (brother), Miss Mary Marindin, Miss Mullens, Col. Malcolm, Col. York, and Col. Addison. Simultaneously with the interment a memorial service was held at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street. The officiating clergy were the Rev. W. M. Le Patourel and the Rev. C. A. Compton. Among those present were Lady Colville, Sir Courtenay Boyle, Lady Muriel Boyle, Sir Thomas W. P. Blomefield, Mr. Francis J. S. Hopwood, Lady Grant, Major-Gen. and the Hon. Mrs. Wrottesley, Major-Gen., Mrs. and Miss Micklem, Col. and Miss FitzRoy Somerset, Major, Mrs. and Miss Davenport, Major Lewis Jackson, Col. and Mrs. Russell, Miss Malcolm, Capt. George, Col. and Mrs. Marsh, Major-Gen., Mrs. and Miss Salmond.

Lieut.-Col. Edmund Yates-Peel, late 85th Light Infantry, eldest surviving son of the late Lieut.-Gen. the Right Hon. Jonathan Peel, died in Dublin on the 24th inst., aged 73. He was born in 1826, and, entering the Army at an early age, served in the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the affair of Bulganac, the battles of the Alma and Tchernaya, and the siege of Sebastopol (medal with two clasps, the 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He joined the Army March 16, 1836; became Lieutenant July 17, 1840; Captain Nov. 3, 1846; Major June 20, 1854; Lieutenant-Colonel Dec. 12, 1854; retired on half-pay June 22, 1858; and retired by sale of his commission in 1863. He married in 1848 Maria Frances Knighton, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Richard Chadwick, and granddaughter of the late Mr. John Moore Knighton, of Grenofen, Devon.

Major Felix Thomas Jones, formerly of the Buffs, died at Chippenham on the 17th inst., aged 61 years. He served in the campaign in North China in 1860, being present at the taking of the Taku Forts (medal with clasp). After obtaining his Majority, Feb. 26, 1876, he retired from the Service by sale of his commission.

Major Matthew Boyd-Bredon, late of the 3rd Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers, of Ballintaggart House, co. Armagh, and 7, Sloane Court, S.W., died at Swatow, China, after a short illness, on the 19th inst.

Major William Hector McCaskell, retired list, Army Pay Department, died at St. Elmo, Devon, on the 14th inst. He served for several years with the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, and, joining the Pay Department as a Captain, retired on pension after obtaining the honorary rank of Major.

Capt. Peter Robert Denny, 1st Dragoon Guards, attached to the 13th Hussars, was killed in action on Tuesday in the operations near Dewetsdorp. Born Jan. 5, 1875, he joined the 1st Dragoon Guards as 2nd Lieutenant from the Militia Dec. 7, 1895; became Lieutenant July 4, 1896; and Captain Dec. 30 1899.

Capt. Samuel Lawrence, 2nd Batn. Scottish Rifles, died of dysentery in Natal on the 18th inst. Born March 3, 1870, he served for close on five years in the ranks of the Inniskilling Dragoons, and was promoted to a 2nd Lieutenant in the Scottish Rifles Feb. 20, 1895; becoming Lieutenant July 28, 1897; and Captain Jan. 28 last.

Capt. Frank Lewis Prothero, 1st Batn. Welsh Regiment, was mortally wounded in action at Karreefontein on Sunday last and died on Tuesday. Born June 30, 1868, he joined the Welsh Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant March 23, 1889; became Lieutenant Dec. 17, 1890; and Captain July 5, 1896. He served in the operations on the North-West Frontier of India 1897-98 with the Tirah Field Force (medal with clasp).

Capt. Stanley Edwards, 5th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, son of Capt. Bennett Edwards, of Haydon Hall, Eastcote, died in Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, after a short illness, on the 14th inst.

2nd Lieut. Robert J. Gibson-Craig, 3rd Batn. Royal Scots, died at Naauwpoort, on the 23rd inst., of dysentery. He was the eldest surviving son of Sir James Henry Gibson-Craig, third Baronet, of Riccarton, Midlothian, and was born on June 5, 1882. He was gazetted 2nd Lieutenant in the 3rd Batn. Royal Scots on October 18 last. Sir James Gibson-Craig's third son, Archibald Charles, who was born in 1883, now becomes heir to the Baronetcy, the first-born having died in infancy.

THE MILITIA BALLOT.

The Earl of Wemyss has addressed the following explanatory notes and questions on the Militia ballot to lords-lieutenant, high sheriffs, chairmen and vice-chairmen of county councils, mayors, provosts, chairmen of quarter sessions, and to presidents of chambers of commerce and agriculture:—

1. The only nation—civilised or uncivilised—that has a military system for home defence which it fails to enforce is our own.
2. Our military system of home defence rests on the constitutional right of the Crown to call upon its subjects compulsorily to defend their homes.
3. This right is embodied in the Militia Ballot Act, by which a universal obligation is alleviated by the chance selection of a few. Thus, the Militia ballot is quite distinct from Continental universal conscription.
4. The Militia Ballot Act is annually suspended by Act of Parliament. It would otherwise be in force.

5. The Militia and the Army are now both raised by voluntary enlistment.

6. Thus they compete for recruits against each other to the detriment alike of the Army and of the Militia, which is always from 20,000 to 30,000 men below its establishment.

7. Out of this ever incomplete Militia 30,000 men are in the "Militia Army Reserve," and can be called upon when required to join the Army.

8. The Militia Act empowers the raising of 60,000 Militia Reserve. Of these not a single man has ever been raised.

Question (1).—Are you of opinion that such a state of things should be allowed to continue, and that the safety of the United Kingdom and all that implies should be dependent upon the patriotic, self-sacrificing action of a half-trained Volunteer force, held subject only to 14 days' notice to quit?

1. All males between the ages of 18 and 25 are, with certain exceptions, now by law subject to the ballot.

2. The ballot—or compulsory military service—can only be applied for home defence.

3. The Ballot Law would be sufficient for its purposes if modified as follows:—

4. Instead of applying to all men between 18 and 35 (as the law now stands) it would be sufficient that once in a man's life, on attaining the age of 19 to 20, he should have to take his chance of the ballot (subject to the before-named exemptions), and, if struck, serve for, say, two years in the Militia and, say, seven in the Militia Reserve.

5. Militia service means, in the first year 57 days' training as recruits with 27 days' training with the regiment; in the second and subsequent years 27 days' training with the regiment.

Question (2).—Are you of opinion that such a modified form of compulsory service, with the above exemptions, for home defence only is right and reasonable, and ought to be readily accepted by the people?

CAVALRY.

2nd Life Guards.—A memorial service for the late Capt. Peel, who died at Bloemfontein on the 16th inst., will be held at noon on Tuesday next at the Chapel, Regent's Park Barracks, when all friends are invited to attend.

10th Hussars.—A memorial service was held at Iver Church, Bucks, on Wednesday afternoon, in memory of the late Capt. Meeking, who has just died at Bloemfontein. Capt. Lord Shaftesbury, Reserve of Officers, has taken up duty with the reserve squadron at Woolwich. Lieut. Crichton, who was reported missing at Sanna's Post, was, it turns out, taken prisoner and has been lying ill from typhoid fever at the Red Cross Hospital, Pretoria. The last reports of him were favourable, for he had passed the crisis, though he was still weak.

13th Hussars.—Lieut. Spencer sailed from Cape Town for England on the 18th inst., in the Cymric, invalided.

15th Hussars.—Major Peyton, D.S.O., has been selected for special service in South Africa.

19th Hussars.—Lieut. St. Quintin and 2nd Lieut. Fanshawe left Cape Town on the 7th inst. in the Nubia for England invalided.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

BB Battery, R.H.A., has been moved from Trowbridge to Christchurch.

No. 11 (S. T.) Company Eastern Division R.G.A. proceeds to-day from Dover to Lydd.

The 132nd Battery R.F.A. has been formed at Trowbridge, and the 133rd at Newport.

Lieut.-Col. W. Tylden and Capt. W. Gillman sailed from Cape Town on the 14th inst. for England, on the Servia, invalided.

Major F. T. T. Fowle, Lieut. K. St. G. Kirke, and 2nd Lieut. L. T. Goff sailed from Cape Town on the 7th inst. for England, in the Nubia, invalided.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 52nd, 54th, 55th, and 56th Companies have moved from Chatham; the 52nd to Portsmouth, the 54th to Curragh, the 55th to Colchester, and the 56th to Curragh.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Col. Ricardo will command, for the time being, the nucleus of the new regiment of Irish Guards at St. John's Wood Barracks. Lieut.-Col. Kinloch, who was lately promoted to the command of the 1st Batn., has been permitted to remain in South Africa in command of the 3rd Batn. during the time that Lieut.-Col. Crabbe is temporarily incapacitated by his wound. Major Cooper, 1st Batn., is ordered home from South Africa on transfer to the regiment.

Scots Guards.—Capt. Sergison, 1st Batn. sailed from Cape Town for England on the 7th inst. in the Guelph, invalided.

Bufs (3rd).—Major Moody, 1st Batn., sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst. in the Purnea for England, to take over command of the new 4th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, to which he has been promoted.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Lieut.-Col. Gawne is posted to the 2nd Batn. on promotion, and proceeds out from England to South Africa to assume command. Capt. Palmes, 2nd Batn., left Cape Town in the Nubia on the 7th inst. for England, invalided.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Lieut. Festing, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 7th inst. for England in the Guelph, invalided.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Lieut. Macartney, 2nd Batn., left Cape Town on the 7th inst. for England on the Nubia, invalided.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—Lieut.-Col. Becher is posted to the 1st Batn. in India, on promotion. Major Wellesley and Capt. Trevor, 3rd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 18th inst. on the Cymric, invalided.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Major Simpson, 1st Batn., sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst. in the Purnea for England to take over command of the new 4th Batn. Middlesex Regiment, to which he has been promoted.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—Capt. Masterson, 1st Batn., left Cape Town in the Nubia on the 7th inst. for England invalided.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Lieut.-Col. Ward has been granted an extension of command of the 2nd Batn. for twelve months from the 29th inst.

Leicestershire Regiment (17th).—Lieut. Weldon, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 14th inst., in the Servia, for England, invalided.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Capt. Ezra, 6th Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the Cymric, on the 18th inst., invalided. Among the invalided brought home from the Cape by the Gaseon hospital ship, which arrived at Southampton on Sunday last, was the brave corporal of the 2nd Batn., who has been recommended for the Victoria Cross for carrying the late Major-Gen. Sir Edward Woodgate out of action after he was wounded at Spion Kop. Unfortunately in doing so he received a wound in the region of the heart, and his condition is most critical.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Major Stanuall, 2nd Batn., has been appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Major-Gen. Egerton, who is in temporary command of the Punjab Army.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—Lieut.-Col. Graham has been posted to his present battalion, the 2nd, in South Africa, on promotion.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn., with details of 1st Batn. will leave Mullingar on Monday for Aldershot, where it will arrive on Tuesday and take over quarters. Major Davidson, Capt. Foot, and 2nd Lieut. Pott left Cape Town on the 7th inst. for England in the Nubia, invalided.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Devonport on the 8th prox. for Salisbury Plain.

Royal Sussex Regiment (35th).—The colours were deposited at Goodwood House on Monday for safe custody during the absence of the battalion on active service in South Africa. An escort of about 50 men, headed by a band, the whole under the command of Capt. and Adj. Hawker, proceeded from the depot at Chichester with the colours, which were borne by two subalterns. At Goodwood House, Col. Cavaye, commanding the Regimental District, handed over the colours to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, who, in receiving them, expressed a hope that at no very distant period the regiment would return covered, as it always had been, with glory and honour. He naturally took a great interest in the Royal Sussex, inasmuch as his grandfather was an ensign in the regiment and afterwards attained the position of colonel. His father was colonel of the 3rd Batn., and his eldest son (the Earl of March) was now in command of that battalion. He would take the greatest possible care of the colours. Among those present at the ceremony were Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Lady Caroline Gordon-Lennox, and Lady Walter Gordon-Lennox.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—Lieut. Jones sailed from Cape Town on the 18th inst. for England in the Cymric, invalided.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—Capt. Ruck Keene left Cape Town on the 14th inst. for England, invalided, on the Servia. 2nd Lieut. Nicklin has been granted permission to accept and wear the insignia of the 5th Class of the Medjidie, conferred upon him by the Khedive, in recognition of his services in connection with the operations, which resulted in the defeat of the Khalifa.

Essex Regiment (44th).—Brevet Lieut.-Col. Tudway is on passage home from the Cape, in command of invalids, in the Cymric, which sailed on the 18th inst.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Lieut.-Col. Bewicke-Copley takes over command of the 2nd Batn. on promotion. Major Kays, 3rd Batn., and Lieut. Wyndham, 2nd Batn. are on passage home from the Cape in the Nubia, which sailed on the 7th inst.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd) has won the Commander-in-Chief in India's musketry prize for the British Service with a score of 539 points. Major Steele sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst. in the Purnea for England, to join the 4th Batn. Manchester Regiment.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—Among the arrivals at Southampton from South Africa in the hospital ship German on Sunday last were the two remaining privates of the noble band of sixteen who held the sangar during the attack on Caesar's Camp, Ladysmith, on Jan. 6, and whose gallantry was referred to by Sir George White in his speech at the Cape. The names of the two men are Parker and Ogden. The act of devoted gallantry of these sixteen brave soldiers will be handed down for the admiration of all ranks who may wear the uniform of the Manchester Regiment in future, and we are glad to learn that Parker and Ogden are likely to receive some special mark of recognition.

East Surrey Regiment (70th).—Lieut.-Col. Harris and Lieut. Porch left Cape Town on the 7th inst. in the Nubia for England, invalided.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Devonport yesterday for Athlone. 2nd Lieut. Scott-Barbour has been granted permission to accept and wear the insignia of the 5th Class of the Medjidie, conferred upon him by the Khedive in recognition of his services in connection with the operations which resulted in the defeat of the Khalifa.

Middlesex Regiment (77th).—Major Scott-Moncrieff left Cape Town in the Nubia on the 7th inst. for England, invalided.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Capt. Grant left Cape Town on the 14th inst. for England in the Servia, invalided.

South Staffordshire Regiment (80th).—Lieut.-Col. Allen sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst. in the Purnea for England on leave.

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—Lieut. Smith sailed from Cape Town for England in the Servia on the 14th inst., invalided.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—Capt. Davison, who was wounded at the battle of Glencoe, is on passage home from the Cape in the Nubia, which sailed on the 7th inst.

Connaught Rangers (88th).—Capt. the Earl of Kingston, 5th Batn., leaves Shorncliffe to-day for South Africa to join the 1st Batn., to which he has been attached.

Scottish Rifles (90th).—Capt. Wanless-O'Gowan left Cape Town in the Nubia on the 7th inst. for England, invalided.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—Capt. Kirk and Lieuts. Macdonald and Thorpe sailed from Cape Town on the 18th inst. for England, invalided.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—2nd Lieut. MacLeod left Cape Town for England in the Nubia on the 7th inst., invalided.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (104th).—Major Hawes sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst. in the Purnea for England, on promotion to the command of the new 3rd Batn.

Rifle Brigade.—Capt. Paley, 2nd Batn., left Cape Town in the Nubia on the 7th inst. for England, invalided.

Army Service Corps.—No. 45 Company is being formed in South Africa and No. 46 Company at Dover.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Mrs. Skey Muir, Honorary Secretary R.A.M.C. South Africa Fund, 77, George Street, Portman Square, W., will be very glad to receive presents of either money or warm clothing on behalf of the men of the R.A.M.C. in South Africa. The articles most needed are woollen drawers and vests, flannel shirts, cardigans, socks, towels, handkerchiefs, tobacco, chocolate, and soap. Major Kerin and Lieuts. Martin and Sloan sailed from Cape Town in the Nubia on the 7th inst. for England, in charge of invalids. Majors G. F. Poynder, A. E. C. Spence and R. L. R. Macleod, and Capt. H. P. Johnson and F. Dove sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst., in the Purnea for England. Major G. T. H. Thomas and Lieut. C. R. Evans, are on passage home from the Cape in the Cymric, with invalids. They sail on the 18th inst.

Reviews.

NAVAL TACTICS.

The appearance of a volume upon Naval Tactics will naturally attract attention in professional circles. Capt. Rudolf von Labrés' volume is in German, and, therefore, perhaps not accessible to a great number of officers, but it is interesting, and some account of it will be acceptable. The author is an officer of the Austrian Navy, and dedicates his book to the Archduke Carl Stefan, but it has been published by Messrs. Mittler, in Berlin, under the title of Die Flottenführung in Kriegen auf Grund des Doppelstaffel-Systems. Many will agree with the writer that the operations in the Far East and the West Indies have not thrown much light upon naval tactics. He believes that truer ideas upon the subject may be derived from theoretical considerations, and that definite principles may be laid down, and having studied the question for a great many years, he attempts to lay down tactical laws and rules, even asserting that now for the first time Admirals in command possess a manual for the handling of their squadrons in war. Moreover he has attempted to establish the relative value of battleships, cruisers, and torpedo-boats in action by day and night, and has entered into the question of coast defence. The publishers offer the book as a compendium of the whole subject. Unfortunately, the matters dealt with are so complex that it is impossible for us to give anything like an adequate account of Capt. Von Labrés' views, more especially as his long series of diagrams is essential to a right understanding of them. He describes the advantages and disadvantages of the line ahead and the line abreast, but himself greatly prefers his own double echelon system. At very great length, and with a wealth of illustration, he expounds the merits of his plan, which he contends offers the greatest advantages for utilising the bow and broadside fire of battleships, and for uniting tactical groups to gain immediate local superiority. This subject, of course, has not been neglected in our own fleet. Capt. von Labrés disposes of the six ships of a division in two lines and the line of his echelon may be two points to port or starboard of the course steered. Let us suppose that in a particular case this disposition is to port; then, on the port hand of the leading column, which is headed by the flagship, is the second column of the division, its three ships bearing two points abaft the beam of the others individually. In this way the division is formed in two squares, and it is a formation consistently maintained, with its echelon disposition, throughout the author's scheme. Nearly always, moreover, the second division occupies a definite place in relation to the first. Its formation is exactly the same, but in the case we have instanced, its port column is a continuation of the line of the starboard column of the first division, and its flagship heads its starboard line. We shall not pursue the matter, and must be content to say that the whole subject is developed in a long chapter on the theory of naval tactics, covering nearly 200 pages closely printed, and that there are discussions of events in the recent wars, of the material of the fleet in action, and of the training of the personnel for action. The plates are very numerous, and we add, as a matter of information, that the volume is published at the price of 10 marks. The keenness with which Germans throw themselves into these matters is instanced by the publication from the same house of Das strategische und taktische Zusammenwirken von Heer und Flotte, by Gen. von Janson, in which is an interesting study of the co-operation of the Army and the Fleet in varying circumstances of strength and situation.

The Army Handbook of Physical Training (Aldershot: Messrs. Gale and Polden, Limited.) It has long been complained that there was a difficulty in procuring the instruction for the physical training of young soldiers. The complaint no longer holds good, for in the brochure before us the want is fully supplied. The fact of its being published by Messrs. Gale and Polden is a guarantee that it is well printed. The book contains forty-six plates. These exercises would be most advantageous in the case of young Militiamen and the Volunteers recruited from the large towns of the kingdom, to whom physical development means everything as a rule.

It has been decided to omit the Young Soldiers' Match, the Inter-Squadron Match (Home), and the Inter-Company Match (Home) from the Army Rifle Association's programme this year.

THE ROYAL REVIEW IN THE PHOENIX.

[FROM A MILITARY CORRESPONDENT.]

The review of the Dublin garrison on Saturday by the Queen was a brilliant ceremony, favoured with weather which was quite appropriate to the occasion. Dublin, it is no exaggeration to say, was never half so full before, for visitors came in their thousands and tens of thousands from all parts of the country to catch a glimpse of their dear Queen. No review at Aldershot could have been better managed. Everything was admirably arranged, a fact not to be wondered at, perhaps, when Ireland's soldier Prince was at the head of affairs and directed all arrangements personally. The review took place in that part of the park known as the Fifteen Acres—a sort of Liffey's Plain, but without the Aldershot dust. The troops which took part in the review were those forming the garrison of Dublin, with two cavalry regiments, the 3rd Dragoon Guards and 21st Lancers, added to give a sort of fillip to the proceedings from a spectacular point of view. An interesting feature was the presence of a Naval Brigade from the ships of the Channel Squadron at Kingstown, under command of Captain R. O. Foote, C.M.G. The sailors were equipped as for land service, and received a great reception as they marched to the review ground. On arrival they had assigned to them, of course, the post of honour on the right of the line. Next came the cavalry brigade, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel H. M. Owen, 1st (King's) Dragoon Guards, and composed of the 1st Dragoon Guards, the 3rd Dragoon Guards, and the 21st Lancers; then came an infantry division under Major-General Gosset, C.B., commanding the Dublin District, with whom were the Dublin District staff. The infantry were divided into two brigades, the first comprising the 2nd and 5th Bats. King's (Liverpool) Regiment and the 3rd Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, with Colonel A. S. Woods as brigadier. The second was composed of the 3rd and 4th Bats. King's (Liverpool) Regiment, the 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade, and the 3rd Batn. Essex Regiment, under the command of Colonel A. M. Paterson. On the extreme left were the boys of the Royal Hibernian Military School, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel H. Hall. The troops were drawn up facing north, with the Chief Secretary's Lodge as a background.

The arrival of the Duke of Connaught and his staff, with whom rode the Duchess of Connaught, Lady Cadogan, Lady Lurgan, and other ladies on horseback, afforded the gathered masses an opportunity for marking their sense of appreciation of the sterling qualities of their much-loved Prince, one who won all hearts during his residence in Ireland in the early seventies, and has "come back to Erin," to the great joy of all classes, to fulfil the duties of a command which every Irishman who lives, be he peer or peasant, will seek to make happy and prosperous. The Queen arrived on the review ground just after four o'clock. Her Majesty, with whom were Princess Christian and Princess Henry of Battenberg, drove in an open landau drawn by four bay horses, and was attended by an escort of the Life Guards. The thousands assembled round the Fifteen Acres greeted the Queen with ringing cheers. Hats were lifted, handkerchiefs waved in the air, and midst thunders of applause the Royal cavalcade moved on. Her Majesty seemed very delighted with her reception, and bowed and smiled again and again. Having been received at the saluting base by the Duke of Connaught her Majesty proceeded to inspect the line of troops. This ordeal over, the march past began, headed by the ever-popular "Jacks" with their eight guns. The bluejackets looked very serviceable, and came in for their full share of applause, not a man or woman present failing to bear in mind the services rendered recently by the Naval Brigade at Ladysmith. Of the cavalry, all did so well that it would be invidious to draw comparisons, but the 21st Lancers, wearing their Khartoum medals, received a most gratifying reception. The King's Dragoon Guards and 3rd Dragoon Guards looked very smart, but in the matter of horses all these corps laboured under a disadvantage, most of the animals appearing to be rough and young, due, of course, to the drain produced by the war.

Of the two brigades of infantry, it is enough to say that three battalions particularly distinguished themselves, the 3rd Batn. Essex Regiment, 3rd Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, and 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade. Rarely of late years has a battalion been seen in Dublin to equal the Duke of Montrose's Highlanders in the matter of physique. The turn-out and performance of this battalion and the 3rd Essex was a veritable eye-opener. If these two battalions are fair specimens of what the Militia is, let us have that force recruited to full strength at once, was the opinion of every soldier present to whom I spoke. "It is simply scandalous," said one well-known general to me as I left the ground, "that a red tape War Office should let the Militia slide. What I have seen to-day convinces me more than ever that there is something absolutely wrong in the administration of affairs at the headquarters of the Army." But to continue my story of the review itself. The Naval gunners and the cavalry passed the saluting base a second time, the former at the double, the latter at a trot. Then the whole force reformed on its original alignment and advanced in review order. The headquarters staff drew up in front of the Queen, the Duke of Connaught saluted, raised his hat, and called for three cheers for the Queen. And what a cheer it was! It did one's heart good to hear it, and still more to hear that which followed from the spectators as the Royal procession passed away. I have been assured by one of her Majesty's suite that the reception accorded by her loyal subjects in Ireland has made a great impression on the Queen. I can fully realise this, for I confess that I was proud on Saturday of being an Irishman, so quiet, so orderly, so respectful, were all I came across. Dear dirty Dublin looked its best; but what struck one most of all was the affectionate terms in which the Queen was referred to on all sides. And I mixed with the crowd purposely to ascertain what the real feeling was.

To provide for the requirements of Regular depôts and fill the vacancies which will be caused by the withdrawal of many Militia officers from these establishments when the remainder of the Militia are embodied, officers commanding regimental districts have been directed to submit at once names from the territorial Reserve of officers, in order that the officers indicated may be ordered to rejoin for duty. At the same time, efforts are to be made to obtain the services of subaltern officers of the Volunteer force.

AUSTRALIAN NAVAL DEFENCE.

CAPTAIN CRESWELL, the Naval Commandant for South Australia, who was a member of the Melbourne Naval Conference, has written to the Times on the subject of the Naval defence of Australia. He wishes it to be known that there was no divergence from the principle that the whole work of sea defence in war must be controlled by the Admiralty in the mind of any member of the Conference, and he asserts that there never was a syllable uttered hinting at any opposite view. Captain Creswell's point is that the suggestion that the Admiral Commanding-in-Chief on the Australian station should inspect the proposed force is a proof that this was the intention of the Conference. He complains, however, of what he describes as the "disinterested, aloofness of the Admiralty, and its agents." He cites the case of an officer commanding in Colonial service, keenly solicitous of his work, asking for an interview with the Commander-in-Chief to obtain his advice on defence questions, and being refused an interview. Captain Creswell believes that in thus treating the colonial officer the Commander-in-Chief was acting under instructions from home. It is, indeed, a pity if, for whatever reason, any instructions have been given which might be construed in the nature of a snub. It cannot but be for the national advantage and benefit if the Commander-in-Chief on the Australian station is brought into friendly relations with the colonial commandants. Moreover, there would in this way be less chance of a divergence of opinion on such an important subject as colonial defence arising between the home and colonial authorities if such relations were maintained. From the latter part of the letter of Captain Creswell we are still inclined to think that he has failed to grasp the only sound principles of Imperial defence. It appears to us that he still proposes to raise a local force for local purposes, the Reserve of which he speaks being merely a reserve for the squadron which is stationed in Australasian waters, and not, as it were, a contribution to the maintenance of the Imperial Navy.

The Times, in a leader upon Captain Creswell's letter, acknowledges the interesting nature of the communication, but does not find in it any thing to make it alter its opinion that the scheme is open to grave objections alike of principle and detail. This view is, we feel certain, that of the naval authorities at home as well as of all those who look at the matter from an unbiassed standpoint. As Captain Creswell in all probability expresses the line taken on the subject, not only by himself but by his colleagues, there is some danger of a deadlock, with the result that the establishment of a Colonial Naval Reserve becomes further off than ever. Such a result is entirely deplorable, and it will be strange if the common sense of our countrymen cannot find a way to surmount the difficulty. It seems strange to us that Captain Creswell and his colleagues should not themselves see the contradictory nature of their statements. He himself, while upholding the principle to which we have referred above, viz., that the whole work of sea defence in war must be in the hands of the Admiralty, maintains that if there should be a naval force raised in the colonies this force should be used only for the protection of the floating trade in Australian waters. That is to say, it should be a localised defence, and the scheme proposed by the Conference goes still further in this direction, for it proposed that the localised force "should be maintained and controlled by the Federal Government and governed by a Federal Discipline Act and regulations." It is altogether beside the question for Captain Creswell to say in the face of this suggestion that the force "will, if the circumstances render such necessary, operate in any way, or anywhere, that the admiral charged with the control of the operations in these waters may judge best." Nor does his reference to the inspection of the force by the admiral assist in explaining away the very specific proposition to which we have referred on more than one occasion.

Everyone must be glad to see in the letters of Captains Creswell and Collins a very different tone to that which found expression in some of the colonial papers a little time ago, when we seemed to read an implied regret at having in some way parted with the control of the ships provided under Lord George Hamilton's partnership arrangement, and a determination not to go as far in the same direction if a new force were raised or a new agreement signed. The colonial naval officers are at one with the authorities at home in desiring to see some practical results achieved, and particularly in the direction of the establishment of a reserve on the same footing as that which is in existence at home. This is the right frame of mind in which to conduct the discussion; it breathes a patriotism much more binding than any "cash nexus." If, however, we are to arrive at any practical result the understanding between both parties as to the conditions of colonial co-operation must be clear. There must be solidarity of control, vested in the British Admiralty; there must be one law and authority, the Queen's Regulations and Naval Discipline Act; there must be one system of training, one standard of efficiency, and one scheme of organization. These are vital points, and once we are agreed upon them all else is matter of detail. We gathered from Mr. Goschen's memorandum that "it was considered most expedient to await the establishment of one central authority under the scheme of federation so as to organise a central system of Colonial Naval Reserve, if an agreement could be arrived at." This was unquestionably a wise decision, and we cannot help believing that the discussion which has taken place in the Times upon the scheme of the Melbourne Naval Conference will be of assistance in enabling such an agreement to be arrived at.

FRANCE AND THE "NAVAL WAR."

CAPTAIN HOUETTE, of the French Navy, has been lecturing before the French Navy League on the subject of Naval War. In his addresses at the Naval School he appears to have taken an academic and traditional line of argument; but before the young spirits of the Navy League he has indulged in somewhat speculative views, and has offered his opinion as to the best means of giving to us the coup mortel. His idea is that England must be invaded by 90,000 men, and he proposes that they shall be embarked in the fishing boats of the Channel. We can scarcely suppose him to imply that they should be disguised as fishermen, and he is taken quite au sérieux by Captain Vignot, in the Marine Française, who rebukes him for so wild a proposal, and states that for the transport of troops high-speed vessels capable of accommodating from 1,500 to 2,000 men, convoyed by torpedo boats and submarines, would be necessary. Now that the French War Minister is definitely charged with coast and port defence, as well as with the control of the Colonial Army, Captain Houette believes that it will fall to him to deal with us.

It is certainly disquieting to note the extremely hostile attitude of the French Press towards England, and that French publicists are continually occupied with projects for making a landing upon our shores. This is a constant theme of naval and military writers in the Marine Française. War with England has lately occupied the pen of M. Verstraet in the Liberté, who has pointed out to his readers that we have progressively seized all the strategic points in the Mediterranean—with the exception, it may be noted, of Bizerta—and points out that a concentration of French naval forces in that sea would be ineffective or dangerous, unless means were found to issue from it at need. He, therefore, strongly urges that the Canal des Deux-Mers should be put in hand forthwith. Here is the only chance, he thinks, of gaining definite local superiority over us, and he cites Admiral Fournier, who is now in command in the Mediterranean, in support of the value of the proposed canal.

It is, perhaps, satisfactory to find that French writers are not content with attacking us. They attack one another, and some of them are particularly bitter in attacking the chiefs of the French Navy. Admiral Rieunier, who was in command of the French Mediterranean Fleet a few years ago, and is now deputy for Rochefort, has strongly advocated in the Chamber the building of the battleships which have been sanctioned, and he appears to be regarded by the "Jeune Marine" as a particular object of hostility, and as the very type of the nepotism ascribed to the "Féodalité Maritime." A torrent of abusive language is therefore directed against the Admiral, who is even begrudged his Naval title, and addressed as simple "Monsieur"; and we notice also that Admiral de Cuverville, an honourable gentleman of long service, and lately chief of the staff, does not escape the besmirching of the press. He has been at the pains to defend himself, in a dignified protest to the Marine Française, which had permitted a writer to speak of him as "a clever speaker, possessing the gift of tears, who excelled in preaching ideas which he cursed in his heart, and declared himself to be the necessary accoucheur of reforms which he sincerely hoped would prove abortive." We sympathise with the Admiral in his indignation that such things should be said of him.

Navv Notes.

The event of the week, from a Naval point of view, is the entertainment of the Ladysmith Naval Brigade at Portsmouth on Tuesday. The actual number of the officers and men of the Powerful who were entertained was 262, including thirty-three Marines. Portsmouth was naturally en fête for the occasion, the route taken by the men in proceeding to the Town Hall, as well as other parts, being elaborately decorated. As the procession passed through the streets we are told that the cheering absolutely drowned the music of the band. The brigade was formed up into three companies, Lieutenant Halsey being in command, with two midshipmen in charge of each company. In addition to Lieutenant Halsey, the officers present were Lieutenant Heneage, Engineers Ellis and Sheen, Surgeon Fowler, and Mr. Biscoe, late R.N. The midshipmen were Messrs. J. R. Middleton, A. Stokes, R. C. Hamilton, T. D. Sharp, H. T. Hayes, and the Hon. Ian Carnegie. After the reception of the brigade by the Mayor at the Town Hall, Sir George White, Captain Lambton, and Lieutenant Jones, R.M.L.I., who was wounded at Graspan, arrived. There were also present at the banquet a number of officers and gentlemen connected with the Services and the port. The Town Hall was beautifully decorated, the galleries were crammed with ladies, and the gallant bluejackets and Marines seemed to have enjoyed themselves immensely. The speeches of Captain Lambton and Sir George White, which are given elsewhere, were most heartily received, and after the banquet the men marched back to their ships through a street lined by Volunteers with lighted torches and Japanese lanterns.

The Queen has notified that she will receive the naval brigade landed from the Powerful for service at Ladysmith and elsewhere in South Africa at Windsor on Wednesday next. The programme, it is understood, will follow the lines of that arranged on the occasion of the reception by her Majesty of the members of the Benin Punitive Expedition at Osborne. The inspection of the Naval Brigade by the Lords of the Admiralty will take place on Monday, May 7, near the Admiralty buildings, where the officers and men will also be entertained. It is understood that the Prince of Wales has signified his intention of being present on this occasion. It is also stated that the Lord Mayor has requested the Admiralty permission for the naval brigade to march to the Guildhall, and that on the same occasion the freedom of the City will be conferred upon Captains Lambton and Percy Scott. There can be no question that a march through the streets of London of the bluejackets and Marines would be most popular with the people.

At the review of the troops by her Majesty in Phoenix Park on Saturday last the Navy made a brilliant show. The bluejackets and Marines numbered 1,800, under Captain R. O. Foote, C.M.G., with Lieutenant A. W. Craig as Brigade-Major, and Mr. Midshipman Bayldon as Aide-de-Camp. The guns in the command consisted of a Maxim battery on stands, three field batteries, each of four 12-pr. breechloaders, one battery of muzzle-loaders, and two batteries of Maxims on field carriages. The Times correspondent, referring to the spectacle, says, "To see these brawny fellows roll past with their great hands swinging with their guns, and to see the Marines follow, almost if not quite as stalwart, and to look at the dapper midshipmen with their ducks and their white gloves, was sheer delight, and none enjoyed the sight more than the Queen." He also relates a curious incident in connection with the advance in review order. A herd of deer quite a hundred in number, massed themselves in front of the bluejackets, and when the men advanced galloped forward, passing in front of the Queen. The ships of the Channel squadron escorted her Majesty across the Channel on her return journey, and have since left for a cruise.

Mr. Goschen is evidently taking coaling matters in hand, and deserves much credit for the new departures which he is taking with a view to increased efficiency in this direction. Remembering, as all naval officers will, in what haphazard fashion this important department has been managed in the past there was unquestionably immense room for improvement, and during the manoeuvres for this year we may hope to hear something about the results achieved in this direction. In addition to a provision of new tugs and seagoing lighters for use in the ports, the time expired this week for the receipt of tenders for four collier transports. These vessels are to be two of them of about 2,000 to 3,000 tons dead weight capacity, and the other two of about 3,000 to 4,000 tons, and they are to be employed in the conveyance of coal or as the Admiralty may think fit. Only modern ships, thoroughly well found and with an ocean speed of ten knots, will be entertained, and the engagement will be for twelve months certain, each ship being tendered for singly. Certain requirements as to ventilators and ballast, winches and derricks are specified, and doubtless the opinions of some of the officers who have been in charge of coaling arrangements during the manoeuvres will be taken as to the suitability of the selected vessel. The experiment will be watched with great interest, for it seems quite possible that this arrangement may be more economical and quite as effective as building new ships for the purpose.

Another departure is notified by Admiralty advertisement which should have interesting results. Tenders have been requested under the regulations for the transport service for the hire of two vessels for about six weeks from July 1 next to deliver fresh water into the tanks of the ships employed in the summer manoeuvres. It will be remembered how in previous years some of the men-of-war have been forced to use salt water in their boilers, a matter which leads to their speedy deterioration. It is evident that these distilling ships are intended to accompany the fleets to assist in supplying fresh water when needed, and in this way to diminish the amount of coal now used by the men-of-war for distilling purposes. Each of these hired ships is to have a storage capacity of not less than 600 tons of water and to be capable of producing not less than 6,000 gallons of distilled water per day, and to be fitted with adequate delivery pumps, the rate of delivery by which is to be stated in the tender and guaranteed. The distilled water must be pure and free from salt, and will be tested in the usual way as to its suitability for boiler purposes. We do not notice that any specified rate of speed is to be guaranteed for these ships, and yet this must have an important bearing upon their usefulness. It is satisfactory, however, that the experiment is to be made, and no doubt some important experience and possibly lessons will be gained by the employment of these distilling ships.

The white ensign that flew from the headquarters of Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, while he commanded the Naval Brigade at Ladysmith, was displayed from the R.N. Recruiting Office, outside Portsmouth dockyard, on Tuesday last, when the brigade marched to the Town Hall. Such an important souvenir of a glorious siege will, we hope, be preserved, and eventually find a resting place either at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, or, as the Powerful is a Portsmouth ship, in the Royal Naval Barracks now being erected at our greatest naval arsenal, where both present and future officers and men of our fleet could see the flag under which their Naval comrades fought during one of the hardest episodes of the South African campaign.

The prize day on board the Britannia, briefly reported last week, was a great success, and was the first attended by Captain O'Callaghan in his new capacity as head of the old training ship. The examination results seem to have been unusually good in the case of the term that has just quitted the vessel, as many as twenty-three cadets out of sixty-four securing first-class marks in mathematics, whilst thirty-three obtained first-class marks in extra subjects, such as French, drawing, &c. In view of the recent comments of Mr. T. Gibson Bowles, who accused the Admiralty of trying to teach the French language in seven lessons, it is good to learn that the cadets have made material progress in this subject. As many as nineteen young gentlemen passed out as midshipmen, and the first seven on the list secured very high marks, especially Mr. Kennedy-Purvis, who totalled 1,968. There is a very marked difference, however, between the marks secured by the cadets at the head and tail of the list, though in this there is nothing novel.

Two or three months back an advertisement appeared in the Service papers and others notifying that the Commissioners of the port of Rangoon desired to secure the services of a naval lieutenant of eight years' standing for the post of Deputy Conservator of the port. The salary offered was £600 a year, rising to £700, and it was stipulated that all candidates should possess a good knowledge of marine surveying. The vacancy, we learn, has now been filled; but the name of the successful candidate is not stated. There cannot be many lieutenants of eight years' standing, who are also surveyors, whom the Admiralty would allow to retire at short notice. Still, in such cases, when good appointments are in the market, every effort should be made to meet the wishes of our officers.

The new naval Church Institute at Chatham will, it is hoped, be as prosperous and beneficial in its working as other similar institutions now being conducted for the benefit of naval men and Royal Marines. It will be remembered that the institute was recently opened under the auspices of the Bishop of Rochester and a local committee, assisted by the naval officers of the port, who lent the Bishop and the Committee great assistance in establishing the institute. These officers, however, have not, we are informed, abandoned their own scheme of erecting a seaman's home on an extensive scale on a site given by the Government, under the Great Lines. On the ground floor of the new building there are recreation and reading rooms and a refreshment buffet. It stands in extensive grounds, which are to be utilised for outdoor games, while a smoking-room and summer-house is also to be provided. The various rooms in the building have received nautical names, such as "Collingwood," "Rodney," "Howe," and "Nelson." The new institute is to be conducted on temperance principles, and it is intended shortly to erect an annexe, affording sleeping accommodation for 150 men.

An Order in Council of March 3 last authorises the Admiralty to place on the retired list, after seven instead of ten years, any Flag officers who, although promoted to that rank subsequent to July 16, 1895, are desirous of relinquishing their position on the active list. It will be a great advantage if Flag officers, whose chances of employment are doubtful, avail themselves of this privilege, and thus give a better flow to the promotion of Captains whose advancement is virtually stagnant until the coming year.

Her Majesty has graciously communicated her appreciation of the smartness of the Naval Brigade when she reviewed that branch of the Service in the Phoenix Park on Saturday last, as well as the excellent manner in which the field batteries doubled past the saluting post.

The Duke of York opened the Seamen's Church and Institute at Great Yarmouth on Thursday last. His Royal Highness, as Master of the Trinity House, together with the Elder Brethren of that Corporation, will lunch with the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House on the 22nd prox.

Admiral of the Fleet the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel left Singapore, on Friday in last week, by the P. and O. steamship Massilia, for England. Prior to his departure the gallant and veteran senior flag officer named the new harbour of the capital of the Straits Settlements after his own distinguished and historical patronymic.

The remains of the late Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax arrived at Plymouth from Naples on Saturday last in the British India steamship Matiana, and were conveyed to London, from whence the body was despatched on Monday evening for interment on Wednesday last, at St. Boswell's, N.B.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. R. Kennedy, who is mentioned for the Nore command in July next, gives his nautical experiences in book form this week under the title of "Hurrah for the Life of a Sailor."

Rear-Admirals A. L. Douglas and A. W. W. Moore, Naval Lords of the Admiralty, inspected the graving docks and coaling facilities at Port Talbot and the neighbourhood on Saturday last, which are undoubtedly of strategic importance.

Rear-Admiral H. E. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian station, was present at the departure of the New South Wales contingent of bushmen from Sydney in the Armenian on Monday last for South Africa, and did not fail to add his good wishes to those of His Excellency the Governor, as well as offer a few judicious remarks on the service in which they were about to take part.

Captain G. Le C. Egerton, Flag Captain of the Channel Fleet, and Captain R. Nigel-Gresley, of the Melampus, had the honour of attending her Majesty's reception at the Viceregal Lodge on Friday evening in last week.

Captain D. McN. Riddell, relieved from command of the Renown, arrived home on Saturday last by the P. and O. steamship Britannia from Malta.

Captain John Phillips has been granted the additional Greenwich Hospital Pension for officers retired from the Staff Captains' list by the recent Order in Council of January 29. He was several years in command of the Commander-in-Chief's yacht at Portsmouth, and vacated that appointment on retirement in 1896.

Captain E. T. Fleet, of the Edgar, left Hong Kong, on Sunday last, with paid-off crews for Devonport.

Captain H. C. A. Baynes, of the Diana, arrived at Sydney, N.S.W., with relief crews for the Australian command. He will recommission the Mildura, and Captain Henry Leah, of the latter vessel, brings home the Diana.

Captain Anson Schomberg, of the Victorious, left Aden for Suez on Monday last, on his return voyage from China, to pay off that vessel at Malta.

Captain F. O. Pike, of the Minerva, left Gibraltar on Tuesday last with the Polyphemus in company, to convoy the latter to Chatham, where she will be paid off, and her officers and crew transferred to the Pyramus.

Captain Fritz Hauch E. Crowe, British Consul-General for the Portuguese possessions in East Africa, arrived at Delagoa Bay on Saturday last in the Tartar, to take up his appointment. His numerous friends will, we are sure, wish him a successful career in this important, and, at the same time, complicated position.

Commander T. B. Triggs's appointment as Superintendent of the Marine Society's training ship Warspite at Woolwich, in place of Commander H. C. Martin, was confirmed on Saturday last at the quarterly meeting of the Court of Directors.

Sub-Lieutenants G. R. Pigou and C. R. Blane have been promoted Lieutenants from the 15th ult., and Sub-Lieutenant L. D. Fisher from the 29th ult., each after one year's junior commissioned service, for meritorious examinations at the Royal Naval College and the scientific schools.

Midshipman the Hon. Ian L. A. Carnegie, of the Powerful's Naval Brigade, has been presented on his home-coming by his Hampshire friends with a pair of field glasses from Longwood and a silver flask from Owlesbury, with the following inscription on the latter gift:—"Presented by the people of Owlesbury to Midshipman the Hon. Ian Carnegie, of H.M.S. Powerful. Her guns saved Ladysmith. October, 1899—February 1900.

Midshipman E. G. Chichester, of the Powerful (he returned home in a transport), son of Captain Sir Edward Chichester, Bart., our able chief of the Transport Department in South Africa, returned to his gallant father's estate in North Devon, near Bideford, on Saturday last, and was accorded a hearty welcome by his county friends. He had the misfortune to contract enteric fever while shut up in Ladysmith, and is still suffering from its effects, but the splendid climate of his native place will undoubtedly restore him to health.

Surgeons A. J. Reed, relieved after three years' service in the Hibernia, and J. Grant, invalided from Malta Hospital, and Engineer D. Carruthers, invalided from the Illustrious, arrived home on Saturday last by the P. and O. steamer Britannia.

Lieutenant H. Ozanne, R.M.L.I., invalided from the Hibernia, arrived home on Saturday last in the P. and O. steamship Britannia. Lieutenant W. Sinclair is ordered to embark for Malta to take his place.

Colonels Commandant W. Guise-Tucker, R.M.A., and R. B. Kirchhoffer, Portsmouth Division, R.M.L.I., attended the municipal banquet at the Town Hall, Portsmouth, on Tuesday last, in honour of the Powerful's Naval Brigade. Lieutenant W. T. C. Jones, R.M.L.I., who was wounded at Graspan, was also present.

THE "POWERFUL" NAVAL BRIGADE.

For the occasion of the banquet to the seamen and marines of the Powerful, on Tuesday, the Portsmouth Town Hall was elaborately decorated with trophies, composed of cutlasses and life-buoys; the galleries were thronged with ladies, and on banners were inscribed the names of Naval battles and those who had won them. The Mayor presided, with Captain Lambton on his right and Sir George White on his left. The Earl of Northbrook, Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, the Earl of Durham, Sir Baker Russell, Admiral Field, Sir John Baker, M.P., Sir William King, and Sir William Pink were also present. Four tables at right angles to that at which the principal guests sat were occupied by 240 seamen and marines.

The Mayor proposed the toast of "The Naval Brigade," to whose services at Ladysmith and the Modder River he paid a tribute. He declared that both bluejackets and marines had earned the gratitude of the nation, and had maintained the best traditions of the Navy. Portsmouth was proud to bid them welcome home. The toast was pledged with enthusiasm.

Capt. Lambton, in responding to the toast said:—"I feel that this most magnificent reception is meant not only for us and in honour of our comrades, who have fallen, but also for the Naval Brigades belonging to other ships, and for the marines, of whom I have 60 still in South Africa. I especially appreciate the high honour of having here the presence of Sir George White. Indeed, I feel that he, as the gallant defender of Ladysmith, ought to sit on the Mayor's right hand. He asked for the Naval guns, the Admiral sent them, I had the good fortune to take them, and a number of my officers and men had the good fortune to come up with me. But the officers and men remaining in the Powerful were as good as those who got to the front. It is a pleasure to us to have co-operated with such a chivalrous and gallant officer as Sir George White, and we shall remember it for the remainder of our lives. The kind way in which our Brigade was received by the Army almost passes belief. They treated us as their guests, and everything we asked for they gave to us. As to Sir George White's decision to stay in Ladysmith, the verdict of history will be that he saved Natal."

Lord Northbrook then proposed:—"Sir George White, the Defender of Ladysmith." A siege, he said, such as that on which all their thoughts were centred, brought out the highest qualities of a general and a man. At the conclusion of his speech three cheers were given for Lady White and three cheers for Ladysmith.

Sir George White, in responding, said: "I appear before you as a representative of those fine troops who have been so well spoken of and whom I am proud to represent. If anything could induce those soldiers to wish to be in my place and away from the field of action it would be that they should join their voices with mine in returning thanks to Capt. Lambton and the officers and men of the Naval Brigade who came to us. I cannot speak too highly of the assistance that was rendered by them and by the 4.7 in. guns. Had it not been for those guns the guns of the Boers would have been brought into position very much nearer to my defence. That would have enormously embarrassed my power of resistance and would have added enormously to the mortality of the garrison. Not once or twice in our island story has the Naval officer and his men come in the nick of time. The siege of Ladysmith was but one more instance. I have listened with the greatest pleasure to Capt. Lambton's tribute to the gallant and persistent manner in which Sir Redvers Buller stuck to the duty, I believe the self-imposed duty, of relieving Ladysmith. I thank you not in my own name alone, but also in the name of the whole garrison of Ladysmith. Let me not forget the honoured memory of those who have fallen, those 600 heroes, many of them known to my friends present, who lie buried under the oleander cemetery at Ladysmith, or who, having fallen from fever, lie buried on the banks of the river. These died as thoroughly in the defence of their country as those who foremost fighting fell."

After the banquet the officers and men of the Naval Brigade marched back to their ship at the dockyard amid the renewed cheering of dense crowds of spectators. At the dockyard the National Anthem was sung and three rousing cheers closed the proceedings.

LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT.

By CAPTAIN C. HOLMES WILSON, R.A.

The mobility of our field artillery is one of its principal characteristics. When, however, in Natal, has its mobility been of use to us? Guns drawn by oxen would have been equally effective, and possibly more powerful. They could certainly have kept pace with the infantry, and as long as they did that there has been, generally, no occasion upon which we could have asked for more. The pace of the infantry has been the pace of the artillery, and, as might have been expected, the pace of both has been slow. Field artillery can only act in one way. Its power lies in its mobility, and if it fails to make use of its mobility it is bound to be outclassed. It dwindles into insignificance, and, like the secondary armament of a first-class fortress, can only look on whilst the real issue is decided by other ordnance. Field artillery, however, cannot always expect to have the same part to play. There are times in which it may be faced by difficulties that it cannot overcome, and then its powers must of necessity be curtailed. Thus the course of the war in Natal goes far to prove that a gap exists between the light and rapid-firing guns required for mobile work and the heavier pieces that are usually fired from platforms in sieges. This gap can only be filled by heavy position guns that can keep pace with infantry. In fact, we cannot produce a field gun that will be fit to provide for both contingencies. The only weapon that at present can hope to fulfil both conditions is the 5in. howitzer, and this has only a range of less than 5,000 yards. The role of field artillery is far from being played out, though many of the principles that have governed its employment in the past may possibly have to be altered. We have yet to hear what has happened at the Cape, where the ground is said to be open and more adapted to the use of all arms than is the case in Natal. It may, then, be possible to put a price on mobility, and to have its real value gauged. Until then we must face the fact that it has been of little use to us here.

Regard the matter, however, from another point of view. Consider what might have happened had the pace of the remainder of the force been increased from a walk to a trot, and our army made, what we may term for simplicity's sake, a really mobile corps. We would then have possessed all those essential qualities which have so far contributed so much to the success of the Boers, with the additional advantage of having a really mobile force of artillery thrown into the scale to assist us on our side. Under such conditions the Spion Kop disaster might, and probably would, never have occurred. Under such conditions the mobility of the Boers would have been counterbalanced, and they would no longer have had time to entrench themselves, as they did before they were attacked. Their superiority would have vanished; their heavy guns would have been useless; they would have been met man to man on an equal footing and turned out of Natal with little loss. And what would the price of such a procedure have been? Nominally, the cost of training a sufficient number of men to act as mounted infantry. Practically, however, the difficulties in the way of such a system would have been great. To meet the Boer on an equal footing on the open veldt our men would have had to be highly trained. Bred and born to the life, the Dutchman can naturally accommodate himself to the conditions under which he serves during times of war. He can shoot for himself, act for himself, and is an adept at taking cover. He is naturally not devoid of military instinct; he knows when his flank is turned, and he can see by the lie of the ground whether it is fit for defence or not. He never moves into action as part of a formed mass of men in column or line; he rides down alone or in company with two or three companions, and takes up a position from which he can see without being seen. He rarely shows himself, and never stands up in action. In the pursuit or retreat his tactics are the same, unless in the latter he can be followed up by cavalry. Now against this essentially guerilla sharpshooter what could we put in the field? The regular soldier, who is taken from entirely different surroundings; the regular soldier, whose only experience of field work is the smattering of mounted drill he gets on the outbreak of war; the regular soldier who has lived in London, or the recruit who has driven a cart in some provincial town. These are the men our generals have had to put in the field in positions in which their utility depended upon their intelligence in circumstances to which they have been entirely unaccustomed. A few weeks mounted drill is no preparation, it creates a confidence which circumstances are sooner or later bound to upset. It is too much to expect. The personnel required for such work can scarcely be looked for in the social strata from which our ordinary recruits are supplied. If such a force is to be created it must be formed of men who can act and think for themselves, or be taught by constant training beforehand to do so. Whether it would not be worth our while to cultivate such a force remains to be determined. The tendency of modern war is undoubtedly in favour of both defenders and assailants making use of whatever cover there is to be got.

It is impossible that entrenched positions should be attacked without heavy loss, consequently turning movements will be of more importance in the future than they have ever been in the past. But it has to be remembered that a turning movement can, speaking broadly, only be attempted by a very superior army or an army possessing a very large number of mobile troops. The only means, in fact, of defeating the rifle is to get away from it, and to get away from it means being more mobile or having a superior force on the spot at the time. The present war is, of course, exceptional. It is, nevertheless, the hard examiner of principles that have hitherto been largely based upon theory. To neglect its lessons would be foolish; to make too much of them absurd. It may be urged that what has happened in Natal could not have occurred elsewhere; that the offensive and defensive will never again bear such relations to each other as they did there. Let us consider the question for a moment. Mobility has made the Boers almost invulnerable against flank attacks, and a want of mobility has prevented us from turning their flanks. To obtain any great advantage over the Boers with a dismounted army a preponderating force would have to be used. On the Continent may not such a condition of affairs occur? If our Army is superior to the other it will usually be able to take the offensive; if, however, they are equal in numbers and similarly prepared it would seem as though victory should almost certainly rest with the more mobile of the two. Frontal attacks are an impossibility, and flank attacks depend upon mobility.

The transport of 6in. guns about a country like Natal is no mean matter. It is a convincing proof of the value of position artillery. Before the occupation of Monte Cristo, the high columns of white smoke that rose from the kopjes by Colenso announced the presence of "Long Tom"—"Long Tom" that had fired on us from Dornkop. The same pillar of white smoke, the same screeching shell, and the same severe bombardment in reply. He had found our artillery out and a sheltered corner for himself, and he might have given us trouble had his shells been a little more effective than they were. They, however, did little harm and "Long Tom" disappeared as he had come—without being seen. I allude to this to show you what can be done when an army moves as we did. Mobility, then, can cover the movements of a 6in. gun. Mobility, as a term, can consequently no longer be confined to the galloping battery that measures its prowess by its pace; it must in future be considered according to its surroundings, and its value judged by the power of the piece to which it is applied. Field artillery is, in fact, in an anomalous position at present. It cannot move with cavalry for long, and infantry cannot move with it except at a walk. Consequently, when field batteries are acting with infantry they are very often reduced to the position of siege artillery as far as mobility is concerned unless a special escort can be provided to take care of them. If field guns have to always move at a walk the raison d'être of their existence practically disappears! A heavier gun could be transported with equal ease at a similar pace, and the effect of its fire would be considerably greater. On the other hand, a field gun to be really effective must be mobile, and to be mobile it must be light.

The general effect of our field artillery fire in Natal has been disappointing except when an overwhelming mass of metal has been employed and every spot in the place of attack made a ranging point of by the guns engaged. In the Free State, on the other hand, our mobile batteries appear to have been most effective, and much of our success appears to have been due to the fact that our cavalry have had artillery to assist them. It is difficult to draw conclusions at present from what has occurred. Many well-accepted theories have been upset. The artillery duel has never taken place, as the Boers have been careful enough to conceal their guns and have never attempted to compete with ours in the manner we had been taught to anticipate as likely. Then our battles have lasted for days, and the enemy have had time to bring up guns that in other circumstances they might possibly not have been able to get into position. Nevertheless, it would be foolish to say that the power of field artillery has suffered from what has

WHAT IS TROPON?

WHAT IS TROPON?

TROPON is a natural pure albumen, prepared after the method of Professor Finkler, M.D., of the University of Bonn.

TROPON is the ESSENCE OF LIFE. It almost immediately relieves prostration and REVITALIZES THE ENTIRE SYSTEM.

TROPON is the only real food for the Healthy and Invalids, for Consumptives, and all suffering from Wasting Diseases, for those afflicted with Gout, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Albuminuria, &c.

TROPON is immediately absorbed and perfectly digested and transformed into blood and muscles. It is absolutely tasteless and odourless. It can be taken in its original form or as Tropo-n Biscuits, Tropo-n Rusks, or Tropo-n Chocolate.

TROPON is tolerated by even the weakest system.

TROPON is used in thousands of hospitals in Great Britain and abroad, and is prescribed by many thousands of doctors.

"THE TIMES," in its issue of September 5, says, under "Naval and Military Intelligence," referring to a report published in Kölnische Zeitung, with regard to an experiment made in the German Army with a new food for soldiers called "Tropon":—

"Twenty-five non-commissioned officers and men volunteered for the experiment and were placed under the command of a lieutenant. Each man received three days' rations of Tropo-n rusk, Tropo-n chocolate, Tropo-n bean and pea soup. During three days the men were to march, in full marching order, thirty kilometres each day, and to sleep at night in the open air. A Tropo-n ration for three days weighs 1,200 grammes, whereas the ordinary ration of solid food of the German soldier weighs 1,950 grammes. The Tropo-n ration is also cheaper in proportion to the amount of nourishment it contains. The men found the Tropo-n food easy of digestion, and it kept them in good condition."

happened. At the end of the war the different branches of the mounted arm may be more closely united—as far as mobility is concerned—than they are at present. It must be remembered that customs die hard, and that anticipations formed before the commencement of hostilities will usually be cherished as long as possible, especially by those who have not actually been engaged. It makes such a difference when one has seen the failure of long cherished theories, as most of us here have done, during Sir Redvers Buller's splendid endeavours to relieve Ladysmith in face of stupendous difficulties.

LORD LANSDOWNE AND LORD METHUEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Everyone who saw the puzzle cartoon in the Westminster Gazette on Monday, April 23, must have marked its cleverness, but, for my humble part, I would fain also put on record an opinion that, as regards Lord Lansdowne and Lord Methuen, it was grossly unfair. The insinuation is that the Secretary for War screens Lord Methuen from blame, while publishing censures on other commanders. Is it not very likely that, when the facts come to be known, Lord Methuen's conduct of the campaign up to the date of the battle of Magersfontein may have met with approval instead of censure, and that the unfortunate issue of that engagement may not fairly be imputed to him? But, even granting that this failure at Magersfontein must technically be attributed to the superior officer, were there not surrounding circumstances to be taken into consideration which may very probably have diverted or mitigated censure? To me it seems there were such circumstances in abundance, and I believe it will be found that they were appreciated by the authority with whom the matter rests. With inadequate transport, scanty artillery and mounted troops, Lord Methuen's division, tied to the railways as its only source of supply, fought the three successful actions under his guidance, which brought it to that position near its objective from which it advanced to deliver a fourth, and, as it proved, unsuccessful, attack. I submit that, when the difficulties encountered and surmounted up to the date of Magersfontein be taken into account, they constitute an unbroken record of resolute, gallant, and successful leadings by Lord Methuen. True that he carried his point by frontal attacks, and with the losses that such attacks entail; but a very little consideration of the conditions will show that he had no means of manoeuvring so as to turn the flanks of an enemy as numerous as his own forces and infinitely more mobile. I conceive it quite possible that the Commander-in-Chief's censures, if any there have been, may have fallen rather on the faulty dispositions which engaged an adequate force on an almost hopeless enterprise. It must not be forgotten that the successful prosecution of that enterprise up to the Modder River prepared the way and laid the foundations for the subsequent resumption of the operations when adequate forces arrived, mobility was attained, and the great turning movement resulting in the capture of Cronje, the relief of Kimberley, and the march on Bloemfontein became possible. It may well be, I submit, that, bearing these facts in mind, no very severe strictures have been passed upon an officer who has displayed such high qualities of courage and tenacity as marked Lord Methuen's advance. Wherefore I hope that many impartial soldiers will be found to agree with me that the insinuation contained in the clever cartoon above mentioned is misleading and unjust.

AITCHISON'S PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS

ONLY WEIGHS 5 OUNCES, ONLY 1 INCH THICK CLOSED.

The Army and Navy Gazette, Feb. 24th, 1900, says:—"The question of bulk as well as weight should be well considered when selecting a glass for service. Many of the glasses which are now being taken out to South Africa will never be used at all, owing to the nuisance of having a big leather case bumping about on the shoulders. The Patent Pocket Field Glass, however, which Messrs. Aitchison, the opticians, have made, will prove one of the most useful accessories which a scout can possess, as it can be carried readily in the pocket, can be brought into use very quickly owing to the system of rapid focus used, and is at the same time more powerful than many glasses three times its size. As supplied to the Imperial Yeomanry, Lord Loch's Contingent, Honourable Artillery Company. Several thousands are now in use in South Africa."

THE SERVICE RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Absence from town prevented my replying earlier to the letter of Major Palliser in your issue of the 7th inst., but, as the subject is one of increasing interest to the public, you may see fit to grant me the space to do so now. Major Palliser's grievances are as manifold as they are heterogeneous. My worst sin, evidently, is that I am a civilian, and as such dared to condemn the Service rifle, hatched out by the famous Small Arms Committee, with every member of which, as he tells us repeatedly, he was personally well acquainted. That fact may be interesting for some reasons, but it hardly throws light upon Major Palliser's qualification to pose as an expert. More to the point would have been a disclosure of what he knows of foreign rifles. Has he shot with all the modern Service arms of Europe and America as I have done? Has he competed against these arms in rifle contests in their respective countries, as I have done in almost all with the sole important exception of Russia? If the fact of being a civilian closes one's mouth to any, say on military matters, I think Major Palliser might commence his muzzling of civilians with the supreme head of the British Army, who is a civilian, and one, moreover, who I believe cannot even claim to have an acquaintance with rifles from the standpoint of a big game shooter.

One wonders from what member of the Small Arms Committee Major Palliser picked up some of his information, not the least astounding being his recommendation that our soldiers, instead of being armed with clip-loaders, should have bandoliers mounted with detachable magazines. Does Major Palliser realise that this would entail a great increase in weight and the use of a screwdriver and other tools to unfasten and replace the magazine, causing, of course, immense loss of time, and requiring an accuracy of adjustment no reasonable officer could possibly expect a soldier to exhibit under fire. Major Palliser does not hamper his letter with facts or figures to disprove my long array of statistical details respecting the inferiority of our rifle in the four principal points, i.e., muzzle velocity, penetration, greater weight of rifle and ammunition, and bad sighting. He indulges in generalising against the German rifles in a tone one hardly expects from one who should know that in military matters the Germans stand unquestionably at the top. His most surprising argument is that rapid fire, which is the result of clip-loading systems, is not an advantage, but a decided disadvantage, for it causes a great waste of ammunition, and it is often difficult to keep the firing line supplied with ammunition. If this theory were right, all modern tacticians should be locked up in bedlams, and the speedier we reverted to the arquebus of the 16th century, with its decidedly slow flintlock fire, the sooner would the British Army reduce Boers and all other foes. To argue on this point would be as ridiculous as to advocate the re-adoption of the old wooden three-decker in lieu of ships like the Powerful.

As to the quality of the shooting of our troops and the "slim" Boer's diary quoted by Major Palliser from the Daily Mail, I would recommend him to turn to a later issue of that paper (April 19), where he will find somewhat more reliable evidence in the shape of a personal experience related by Mr. Villiers, the war artist, just back from the front. While asleep in his Cape cart three gentlemen in khaki opened fire at him 100 yards off, mistaking him for a Boer. The fire proved so ineffectual that Mr. Villiers subsequently declared he felt nowhere so safe as when under his countrymen's withering salvoes. Major Palliser says he is going to make inquiries regarding the shooting of our men and about the rifle. I can save him that trouble, for not only have all the principal correspondents, i.e., the Times Making correspondent, the Daily News, the Daily Telegraph, &c., sent conclusive evidence upon these points, but I can quote chapter and verse in the shape of numerous letters and personal statements from officers and men at the front. Even more conclusive evidence is afforded by the returns from the hospitals showing that exceedingly few Boers comparatively have been wounded by British rifle fire. Major Palliser says that he heard no complaints from officers in the Tirah campaign about the Service rifle. That proves nothing; for to-day even the War Office knows so little about foreign rifles and their penetration that the plates of the armoured train were ordered of a thickness ineffectual in stopping the Mauser bullet at short ranges! To be able to pass judgment upon a rifle's quality one must know a little something about the rifles of other countries, and in this respect I maintain we are lamentably behind the times.

In an article in the forthcoming number of the Nineteenth Century, which, by the way, I would recommend Major Palliser to glance through, I have given some instances of how the British Press stultifies itself by admitting articles relating to technical matters such as rifles, &c., which are written by men who betray incredible ignorance about most rudimentary matters. These mostly appeared at or soon after the outbreak of the present war, before the deadly test of battle proved in a manner we should not forget our inefficiency in matters relating to arms. That there should still exist people who deny this inefficiency must come as a surprise to those who have experience in the matters here dealt with. There would be little hope for urgently needed reforms were this class more numerous than it is to be hoped it is.

W. A. BAILLIE-GROHMAN.

A Parliamentary paper just issued gives particulars of land purchased by Volunteer regiments for the purpose of rifle ranges under the provisions of the Military Lands Act, 1892. The return shows that by the compulsory powers of the Act the 2nd and 6th V.B. Manchester Regiment bought land at Diggle, 16 miles from Manchester, in 1897, and the 3rd V.B. Lancashire Fusiliers and the 4th and 5th V.B. Manchester Regiment, at Crowden, 17 miles from Manchester, in 1898. The lands bought by agreement are:—By the 2nd V.B. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, at Entwistle, 7½ miles from Bolton, in 1893; by the 1st V.B. Border Regiment, at Great Mill Fell, Troutbeck, Penrith, in 1898; and by the 1st V.B. York and Lancaster Regiment, at Monnybrook Range, Totley, near Sheffield, in 1899.

TO MILITARY MEN AND OTHERS.—PIPECLAY SUPERSEDED BY PICKERING'S "BLANCO" for Whitening Belts, Helmets, Gloves, &c. "Blanco" removes stains and discolorations, and ensures evenness of colour, and a soft silky surface. Does not dust or soil. Much better, more convenient, and cheaper than pipeclay. No trouble of preparation. "Blanco" is sold everywhere in cup-shaped blocks, in zinc non-corrosive boxes. Manufacturers: JOSEPH PICKERING and SONS, Sheffield.

PICKERING'S "KHAKI-BLANCO"

For cleaning and renovating "Khaki" Accoutrements, Helmets, Shoes, etc.

Everybody knows the merits of Pickering's Blanco for whitening all articles of Buckskin Leather, or White Canvas, and now Pickering's have met the want of the day by introducing "Khaki-Blanco," a similar preparation to Blanco, but of a "Khaki" colour; it is prepared in a most careful manner to ensure an Evenness of Colour, and contains nothing at all injurious to any "Khaki" article to which it may be applied. "Khaki" cleaned regularly with this article keeps a good colour and always looks like new.

White belts and other military equipment, buckskin and canvas shoes, etc., can be made khaki colour by the application of "Khaki-Blanco," and this will in nowise interfere with their being re-whitened with Blanco at any future time.

GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition;
loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,
weighs about 600 lbs.

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN THE ORANGE STATE.

LORD ROBERTS'S strategic line lay, on Wednesday, the 25th ult., south-east from Warrenton on the Vaal to Wepener resting on the Basutoland border. It crossed the railway at Bloemfontein, and covered approximately 170 miles. The raiding commandoes which had lately held undisputed possession of the south-eastern districts, and had penetrated with singular boldness and rapidity almost to within striking distance of our posts along the Orange River, were then in full retreat northwards from De Wet's Dorp and Wepener in the directions of Thaba N'chu and Ladybrand, with the British in pursuit. As a military operation, the converging advance of Lord Roberts's columns from south, west, and north-west has been a distinct success, and the raising thereby of the investment of Wepener, which place the Boers had marked as their own, caused throughout the enemy's ranks a bitter disappointment that no doubt neutralised, to a great extent, the encouragement they had derived from their successes at Koorn Spruit and Reddersburg. To expect the capture of any but a small fraction of the Boer forces was to be over sanguine, and the fact that the bulk of the raiders, retaining their organised formations, have entirely eluded the British commanders need cause no surprise. While Thaba N'chu continued to be held by the enemy, and an open road ran north-east from Wepener to Ladybrand, it was not possible to complete the investment of the raiders, or to prevent their escape. But the improvement in the military situation due to the operations has been considerable. The great Boer incursion southwards has been swept back, and the right flank of the army of occupation is being made secure preparatory to the general advance towards the Vaal which has been so long awaited.

Lord Roberts, pushing out his right, has reoccupied Sanna's Post, retaken the waterworks, driving the enemy from the neighbouring hills, and again placed a force in Thaba N'chu. On the 26th ult. General Smith-Dorrien's Brigade occupied the town, the Boers retiring thence in the direction of Ladybrand, having fought a rearguard action with General Hamilton on the 25th at Israel's Poort, in which the Canadian regiment bore itself most gallantly. On the 27th General Rundle's Division reached Thaba N'chu, pursuing the enemy from De Wet's Dorp. A strong commando was then in position ten miles to the east on the road to Ladybrand, our mounted troops being in contact with them. General Pole-Carew returned on Sunday to Bloemfontein with his division, having performed excellent service during his march to De Wet's Dorp, not the least important part of which was his prompt action in dealing with burghers who had violated their oaths and taken up arms again. It is absolutely necessary for the security of the British communications that the disarmament of the fighting burghers left behind as the Army advances should be real, and, as far as possible, all means removed by which the occupied country might become again the hunting ground of armed raiders. It was reported on the 27th, three days after the general retreat began, that small commandoes, numbering in the aggregate about 1,000 men, were still roving the country in the Smithfield and Rouxville districts. The prompt action of General Pole-Carew will have a salutary effect, and these commandoes will probably melt away, the burghers returning to their farms to escape, if possible, the deprivation of horses and cattle as well as of arms, to which they have rendered themselves liable. During the recent operations the most onerous part of the work, because the most rapid and continuous, fell to the mounted troops. Once again in this war it has been amply demonstrated that on them the British Commander-in-Chief must mainly rely for successfully coping with the Boer commandoes, not only when they are caught in the open, which they very rarely allow themselves to be, but when they occupy their entrenched positions, provided only that the mounted force is in sufficient strength, and that the positions can be turned by manœuvring such as that in which General French has shown himself to be a master both in the district around Colesberg and since the invasion of the Orange State. The horse is perhaps the most important factor in this war. Already since the commencement of hostilities the waste in horse-flesh has been phenomenal, to be measured best by the fact, as stated by Mr. Wyndham in the House of Commons on the 26th ult., that since the year began some 42,000 remount horses and 23,000 mules had been bought, and of these about 44,000 had been shipped to South Africa during the first four months of the year. When these vast numbers are faced it must be confessed that the impulse—that comes so readily—to find fault on account of administrative shortcomings is to a great extent disarmed, yet it must be patent to all who follow the fortunes of the campaign, that the subsequent case of these valuable animals has not kept pace with their numbers, the glaring insufficiency of the Veterinary Department having become a familiar theme with the war correspondents. Although the enemy fell back from the town of Thaba N'chu on the advance of the British, they remained on a range of hills in the vicinity stretching from north-west to east of the place, having been reinforced by the fugitive Boers from Wepener. Their position, reconnoitred by General French's 3rd and 4th Cavalry Brigades to the east and by General Hamilton to the north-west, was found to be one of great natural strength. Based on this position the enemy on Saturday and Sunday assumed the offensive, and persistently assailed our troops around Thaba N'chu; but the position occupied by General Rundle's (8th) Division, covering the camp and facing the Boers to the east, was successfully maintained at all points. Fighting has continued daily since the 27th, and on Saturday the Boers again fell back on a fresh position to the north-east, both their flanks having been turned. On Sunday the Boer attack was directed against the British flank with the object of seizing a pass through the mountains and cutting off a convoy, but General French in his turn attacked the enemy also in flank and checked their advance, forcing them to retire under cover of darkness. General Brabazon on the same day returned to Thaba N'chu from Wepener with a strong force of Yeomanry. On his way he helped to rescue a convoy coming from De Wet's Dorp, which was hard pressed by a raiding commando, and, but for this timely aid, might have fared badly. Generals Hamilton and Smith-Dorrien occupied on that day a strong position across the road leading north to Winburg. By these dispositions three brigades of infantry, two of cavalry, and a force of mounted infantry, about 18,000 men in all, were posted about Thaba N'chu preparatory to further movements against the enemy's position.

On Tuesday General Hamilton, strongly reinforced, fought to a successful finish an action commenced on Monday in the vicinity of Houtnek, twelve miles north of Thaba N'chu. The position held by the enemy was simultaneously attacked in front and flank and threatened in rear, and a passage cleared for a further advance northwards. The enemy dispersed to the north and east, but continued to maintain their hold on the hills eastward of Thaba N'chu. On the same day, in order to still further open the way for a general onward movement, three kopjes to the east of Karee Siding, Lord Roberts's advanced post, were assailed by Colonel Henry's mounted infantry. The Boers offered a stout resistance, and deploying into the open plain under cover of their guns, contrary to their habit, boldly attacked the British, with the result that they were speedily repulsed with loss. Having received reinforcements they renewed the fight, with temporary success, but the timely co-operation of General Hamilton with his mounted infantry from the direction of Houtnek, and of General Maxwell's infantry brigade, forced the Boers back on their main position, and the three kopjes—the objectives of the day—were captured. There was a large admixture of foreigners in the enemy's ranks which may account for the change in their tactics. The operations were directed by Lieut.-General Tucker. The actions above recorded are clearly indicative of the commencement of Lord Roberts's advance, and also afford striking evidence that the fighting power of the enemy is still far from being broken. The Boers evince the greatest reluctance to leave the rich grain country eastward of Bloemfontein, and still keep a firm grip on Ladybrand and its surrounding mountains. Their hold to the country is not likely to be of long duration. The 11th Division, composed of the Guards' and 18th Brigades, marched out of Bloemfontein on Tuesday. Some 40,000 troops, comprising the commands of Generals French, Pole-Carew, Ian Hamilton, Tucker, Kelly-Kenny, and Colville are now disposed to the north and north-east of the capital, on a front of some thirty miles stretching from Karee-Kloof through Vlakfontein to Jacobsrust. The forces have received their winter clothing and remounts, and their general disposition shows that important developments may daily be looked for. Meanwhile, on Wednesday, General Hamilton, after seven days' fighting out of ten, was halting for a day's rest in camp, five miles west of Houtnek, at Jacobsrust, by order of Lord Roberts. In the neighbourhood of Kimberley the enemy show increased enterprise, emboldened by our want of activity. They have taken possession of the small town of Winterton, beyond the Vaal, a place but eight miles west of the railway, and lying sixteen miles to the south-west of the British camp at Warrenton. From Natal, where Sir Redvers Buller holds 10,000 Boers in idleness in their mountain positions, there is nothing to record save the arrival of Militia to form a garrison for Durban. Sir Frederick Carrington has left Beira, where he was accorded an excellent reception by the Portuguese authorities, and has reached Marandellas where his force of Colonials is collecting, and whence his westward march will commence. Whether his immediate objective be Mafeking or the Transvaal border, his progress cannot fail to relieve, directly or indirectly, the pressure on Colonel Baden-Powell. The news which reaches us as we go to press that Lord Roberts has now occupied Brandfort is all important, for it marks a distinct step in the direction of Pretoria.

ARMY RECRUITING.

THE year 1899 was an exceptional one. Hence the report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting for that year must be considered as of exceptional interest. Major-General Borrett, indeed, himself adopts this view, for in his fourth paragraph he writes:—"The war in South Africa largely contributed to the material improvement which set in during the last quarter of the year," which resulted in the year ending as the best since the introduction of short service. The number of men raised for the Regular Army during the twelve months was 42,700, and for the Militia 40,653. And not only did more recruits present themselves for enlistment, but those who did come forward for enrolment were of decidedly better physique. Before the war came the percentage of recruits taken under standard was admittedly "very high," but this state of things was at once changed when it became known that war was inevitable. There is no doubt, as General Borrett says, that the generous treatment of Reservists by employers of labour has had much to do with rendering the Army more popular as a calling. It is a fact upon which all classes of the community are to be congratulated, and none more than those whose proper feeling has produced such a good result. It shows one direction at least in which Governments will have to move if they persist in the view that all forms of compulsion are to be deprecated. It is satisfactory to know that not only the Reservists themselves, but their wives and families also, are being thought of. This, General Borrett holds, will do much to cause the feeling against the Army, which unfortunately still exists in many parts of the kingdom, to die out. We see, therefore, how great the service is which employers of labour have rendered to the country by their patriotic action.

The Inspector-General of Recruiting is not satisfied that the Government is as sensible as it ought to be of its duty to the Army. He is of opinion, and we need scarcely say how entirely we endorse his views, that the establishment of recruiting houses of a better class in large centres would tend greatly to the advantage of the Service. A larger proportion of recruits are now obtained through the instrumentality of the Recruiting Staff officers, as distinct from the officers employed at the headquarters of regimental districts; but it is scarcely to be expected that young men of a better class will regard a military career with favour if the recruiting offices are situated in the lowest and most squalid parts of a town. General Borrett lays great stress on this all important matter, and we trust that it will receive the early attention of the Government. We can imagine nothing more calculated to create a favourable impression than a well-appointed building, furnished with good offices, reading rooms, &c., to which young men could go to make inquiries as to the conditions of service, &c. To quote the words of the report:—"Were the recruiting houses in large cities more adapted to the dual functions of recruiting centres and employment bureaux, the recruit who has tired of country life, and has drifted into a town to find employment which has not satisfied his active disposition, would meet the time-expired soldier, who, having finished his term of service in the Army, has come to the same place to seek employment." The suggestion is a valuable one, and ought not to be disregarded at a time when such commendable efforts are being made to increase the attractions of the Service. A few thousands voted for the purpose of providing the establishments recommended by the Inspector-General would be money well spent, and we commend the idea to the favourable notice of the Service members as one which they might well press upon the consideration of the Government.

A decision was come to a few years ago to make service in the cavalry general. Cavalry officers pointed out at the time that altered conditions would prove most mischievous in their operation, even if it produced better returns. We gather from a paragraph in the report before us that this view is shared in by the present Inspector-General, who writes:—"A marked feature in the year's recruiting has been the increase in the number of recruits enlisted for the Cavalry of the Line. This increase compares most favourably with the recruiting for 1898, which in itself was a great improvement over that for 1897. The figures are as follows:—In 1897, 2,426; in 1898, 3,778; in 1899, 4,793. The facilities granted to cavalry recruits to join the particular regiments in which they wished to serve, even if such regiments are abroad, have been largely made use of." This statement speaks for itself. In a voluntarily enlisted army it is most desirable to give the soldier a freedom of choice so far as the particular regiment with which he desires to do duty is concerned. One young man may have met the 17th Lancers, for instance. If allowed to join that regiment he will be happy and contented, and strive to live up to its traditions. The 16th Lancers is equally distinguished, but if having been posted to the 17th a young soldier is suddenly drafted into the 16th, he will feel that an injustice has been done and may resent the interference with his liberty. No system can be defended which denies the recruit the right of deciding what uniform he should wear, and no practical soldier can conscientiously say that it does not matter, one uniform being as good as another. The young soldier will never be brought to think so, for it has to be remembered that the man who selects his regiment for himself does so as a rule from firm conviction that he is acting wisely. We are glad, therefore, to find that General Borrett, to all intents and purposes confirms the view of all experienced cavalry officers. He is an infantryman himself, but the figures he gives are a strong argument in favour of the more enlightened system which now obtains.

THE WAR OFFICE.

THE direction of military business by a civilian administration controlling a military executive," say the reformers, "has not proved to be economical, effective, or satisfactory in the conduct of a great campaign such as that in which we are now engaged." Let that be admitted if it will please the public and clear the ground for the great reorganisation which is to endow the Empire with a perfect Army when peace is proclaimed in South Africa! But the newspaper cry against "the War Office" is as senseless as Daniel Quilp's assaults upon the wooden figurehead on which he vented his malignity. "The War Office must be destroyed root and branch!" Who or what? Is it the Commander-in-Chief? Or is it the Adjutant-General? Or is it the headquarters staff holus bolus? What have they done or left undone, good Quilp? Have they thwarted the Secretary of State for War and his advisers? And, if so, in what have they overruled or disobeyed him? Have they slighted the able and experienced civilians who are at the head of the civil departments in Pall Mall? Field-marsals and generals, commanders-in-chief, adjutants and quartermaster-generals, and all the cock-hatted employés who come in for a term and "grieve the heart," have their exits and their entrances; but the great permanencies are there till they are ripe for pensions—and we are bound to say they well deserve them. "Down with the War Office!" passes them as an idle cry which they respect not. But for officers who would willingly exchange their desks for the saddle it is most offensive to be treated, despite their honourable service in the field, as if they were incapable, incompetent bunglers unfit for the posts they occupied and unworthy of public confidence and respect. It is a strange result of the transfer of officers from active service in the field to desks in Pall Mall that they should apparently, at once almost, lose all knowledge of the subjects on which they have spent their lives, and become butts for the invective of the critical classes in public, in the press, in Parliament, and, strangest of all, in the Service, which perforce speaks with bated breath about them. At this moment the "War Office" is assailed for the paralysis at Bloemfontein of Lord Roberts's army by the man in the street and the lady in the salon, and "the War Office" must mean for these critics Lord Wolseley, Sir Evelyn Wood, and the other military chiefs, for no one else is held up to the obloquy of the country.

Army Notes.

It must be confessed that the publication of telegrams that passed between the War Office and the generals at the front relative to the publication of the Spion Kop despatches has not tended to alter our opinion that a great mistake was made in giving Lord Roberts's views to the world. When the Government intimated their intention of publishing these subsidiary telegrams all hoped they would throw new light on the subject which would give some justification for the course taken by the authorities. In this expectation we are disappointed, nor did the debates which took place in both Houses of Parliament last night make the action of the Government in this matter look better. We do not say this in any party spirit, but from a sincere conviction that the task our generals have before them in South Africa has not been made lighter or easier, as Sir A. Acland-Hood said, by the publication of the Spion Kop despatches. Mr. Wyndham, in defending the Government, took his stand on the Queen's regulations and gave precedents for the course adopted. The situation in Natal, however, is not exactly the situation that existed in Afghanistan in 1879-80. But if there were no precedent for withholding the despatches, then we maintain that the Government should have made one. We do not believe that if the representatives of the War Office had frankly stated in Parliament that they considered the publication of the Spion Kop despatches at the present moment as inopportune and mischievous that the public would have pressed for their production. Much importance seems to be attached in the quarters to the irresponsible heckling for information indulged in by a handful of members at Westminster. The Government appear to have thought that having published the earlier despatches of the campaign they had no alternative but to publish all. Yet they appear to have recognised themselves that the publication of the despatches in the form in which they were issued was undesirable. How else are we to explain the suggestion that Sir Redvers Buller should send a fresh despatch for publication in order that those originally sent might be kept locked up in the pigeon-holes of the War Office. Sir Redvers Buller seems, rightly or wrongly, to have interpreted this as a request that he should rewrite the despatch and "water down" some of the points in the original documents which have created so great a sensation. If this was his impression we agree entirely with what Sir A. Acland-Hood said on the subject in the course of the debate in the House of Commons. It is, in fact, the one pleasant feature in the telegrams published yesterday morning, that they reflect nothing but credit on the generals at the front. What Sir Redvers Buller had written he stood by, and if the authorities at home thought it desirable to make the despatches public neither he nor Lord Roberts was prepared to place any obstacles in the way. But this does not by any means make them co-responsible with the War Office in their publication. It cannot be too emphatically stated that the whole responsibility in this matter rested with the Secretary of State for War and his colleagues in the Cabinet. It is no exaggeration to say that in a military sense a more serious error of judgment could scarcely have been committed.

the vicinity of Colesberg from December 15 to January 25 were issued yesterday evening, and reached us as we were going to press. Lord Roberts, in forwarding them to the War Office, pays a high and well-deserved tribute to the General's "ability and judgment in constantly harassing the enemy and driving them from one strong position after another without exposing his men to heavy loss." General French speaks most eulogistically of the conduct of all ranks under his command. In this connection Lord Roberts writes:—"I concur with the general officer commanding in thinking that the discipline, courage, and endurance of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men employed in their operations are deserving of high commendation, and I am glad to observe that the Royal Horse Artillery and New Zealand Mounted Rifles appear to have specially distinguished themselves.

The Royal Warrant promulgated this week with the object of increasing the establishment of the Army is an important one, for it virtually is an admission that those were right who advocated the principle of a long service system worked in conjunction with the shorter terms of enlistment, the basis upon which our Army has been recruited for close on thirty years. A limited number of men are invited to rejoin the Army who have completed twelve years' service, either with the colours, or with the colours and in the Reserve, provided those seeking re-engagement are of good character and are under thirty-seven years of age. The men returning to arms will be allowed to soldier on until they are forty-one years of age, or have completed twenty-one years' service. The decision of the Minister for War is a wise one. It is the natural outcome of the present war, which has clearly demonstrated that the Reservists can thoroughly be relied upon to fulfil their obligations in periods of emergency; and again, that there are numbers of men, who, having completed their terms of colour and Reserve service, are willing to take their places in the ranks if called upon. In other words, that a man who has once been a soldier, if asked to do so, will readily become a soldier again, provided that the terms offered are such as to secure him against absolute beggary when the further period for which he is required to do duty has expired. Doubtless some thousands of men will be prepared to accept the conditions now offered, and, as their resumption of military duty will in no way affect the Reserve, Lord Lansdowne is to be congratulated for having taken such a practical view of the situation. The men who will be secured under the conditions laid down in the Royal Warrant ought to prove a useful addition to our military establishments, whilst they will enable the War Office to launch the new units which it is proposed to create with some measure of success, as each will contain its quota of trained men, who will leaven the mass and form a most valuable nucleus. It is early yet to form any estimate as to numbers. We believe, however, that no difficulty will be experienced in finding enough men to supply immediate wants, and it cannot fail to assist recruiting considerably when the would-be soldier is made to feel that no hard-and-fast rules exist which prevent his serving on for pension if he desires to do so. The new departure is, of course, an experiment, but we are disposed to think that the experiment will result in benefit to the Army generally. It is a further step in the direction of elasticity of system, that elasticity for which those have pleaded for years who, like ourselves, objected to short service, not on principle, but because in a voluntarily enlisted army it offered no facilities for a good soldier to follow his career if he wished to do so within reasonable bounds, and thus drove from the Service many tried and earnest men, who, being soldiers by instinct, regarded their dismissal to civil life as a cruel injustice, as so many have done. The presence in the ranks of a selected body of older and more seasoned men cannot but be an advantage. It is a thing we have pleaded for for years. We are glad therefore to know that common sense has at length prevailed.

scandals has now been formally appointed. It is a rather cumbersome body, the Government having decided to nominate fifteen members instead of the five originally suggested. Apart from numbers, however, the constitution of the Committee gives no cause for complaint. Major Rasch and Colonel Lockwood, with Colonel Denny and Captain Donelan, may be relied upon to look after the interests of the Service, and Mr. Howell, who has done more than anyone else to keep this matter before the public, is also, we are glad to see, to have a seat. Mr. Howell was anxious that the evidence of the authorities in South Africa who have been charged with the duty of receiving and distributing the supplies sent out from England should be taken. He put a question on this point to Mr. Powell Williams on Thursday, but the Financial Secretary assured him that the careful inspection to which all stores were subjected before being despatched, prevented defective articles leaving English ports. If by mischance any defective stores did reach the troops, reports will, of course, be made to the War Office, and the necessary steps will be taken to bring the contractors to account. The Government seem, in fact, to court the fullest inquiry into the whole subject. The reference to the Committee is thoroughly comprehensive. The Committee is directed to "consider and report upon the allegations of fraud and irregularity in connection with War Office contracts during the last twelve months." The time limitation excited some comment and adverse criticism, but Mr. Balfour was careful to explain that it was introduced simply and solely to prevent a roving inquiry. If anything comes out in the course of the Committee's investigations suggesting that a more far-reaching inquiry is expedient the Government has pledged itself not to resist it.

The disaster at Koorn Spruit and other similar mishaps that have marked the campaign in South Africa, have naturally attracted a great deal of attention in Parliamentary circles. There is a strong feeling that in some cases these mishaps have occurred through no fault of the officer commanding, though in consequence of them their military reputations may have been sadly damaged in the public eye. There have undoubtedly been cases, too, in which officers have been much to blame indeed, and it has not always followed that they have suffered any punishment, material or otherwise. In view of these facts a question which Sir Howard Vincent has given notice to ask the Under-Secretary for War next week has attracted considerable notice, and the answer will be awaited with interest in military circles. It is often possible to throw out a suggestion in Parliament through the medium of a question, and Sir Howard Vincent has taken advantage of this fact to ask the military authorities whether some machinery could not be devised similar to that working in the Navy, whereby officers in command are able to prove before a court-martial that their dispositions were perfectly correct, and that all possible precautions had been taken to ensure success.

The recent operations in the Free State are not promising for an early termination of the war. The enemy have managed to extricate themselves from a difficult situation with their usual cleverness, and have got clean away with their heavy guns, baggage, and transport. We talk glibly enough about South African methods of warfare, but do we realise that the secret of their success lies in their harmony with the fundamental principles of the art of war as it has been practised from the beginning? They are local only as far as the nature of the country demands it. To suggest that the Boer is as unprogressive in a military sense as he is socially and intellectually is to see him in false perspective. He is, perhaps, the most progressive soldier of modern times. He fought with Dingaan and Colonel Smith in one fashion, with the natives in the Transvaal in another, and with the British at Majuba in yet another. To put it shortly, he obeys the soundest of all military maxims by adapting his methods to the enemy and the circumstances.

Lieut.-General French's despatches describing the operations of the force under his orders in

The Select Committee of the House of Commons which is to inquire into the Army Contract

Major F. D. Baillie, the "war correspondent" of the Morning Post at Mafeking, is of a jocund spirit quite in keeping with that of the master mind of "B. P." "Shelling" is a joke to him, and if "persons" are killed by it "all is well." "No-body minds," he swears, "we can stick on to it for two months or more." This on April 20! But Lord Roberts has informed "B. P."—and the Boers and the world—that he hopes to relieve Mafeking on the 14th. Mr. Winston Churchill's account of the fighting at Thaba N'chu on April 28 reads very like another triumph of Boer "slimness." Rundle's Division, French's Cavalry, Hamilton's Mounted Infantry Division, Dickson's Cavalry were demonstrating against the enemy who were "thought to be discouraged," but who all the same pressed us, and hemmed in Kitchener's Horse till they got away at midnight. Next day Gordon's Cavalry moved round the Boer left; Rundle engaged their centre; Ian Hamilton, with Smith Dorrien's Infantry Brigade and Mounted Infantry, turned their right. The movement, all under French, began at dawn! At 4.30 the Boers, "nearly" 4,000 strong, marched away out of our imaginary "trap." The account leaves the Boers marching away gaily to the north-east, within sight of horse artillery, cavalry, mounted infantry, and infantry some 10,000 strong. Mr. Churchill's phrase "General Dickson hoped to make a bag," is not happy in this connection. What were our generals doing? The only "head of game" in "the bag" which Mr. Churchill mentions is "one fierce greybeard, dead;" but, he adds, "the Boers probably carrying others away." Dickson, instead of a bag, made a retreat, and, according to Mr. Churchill, "only just withdrew in time."

Punch's chapter of "Unrecorded History" this week is pungent. Two gentlemen in chimney-pot hats and West-End toggerie are reclining in easy chairs draped with the Union Jack, and placidly smoking Dutch pipes. They are on "the Stoop," Bloemfontein. Before them is a military chest labelled "To Pretoria. With Great Care." On the lid are two Indian helmets which have been utilised by swarms of bees to hive in. One of the smokers says: "Charming spot this, Kitchener! Don't half like leaving it! Wish we could have settled down altogether like the Reservists. Awfully overrated place Pretoria, I expect." The cartoon "War and Famine," is surely a mistake. We had to look twice ere we could believe it was the work of Linley Lambourne.

The casualty lists which occupy every week so many columns of the newspapers offer one "heading," the like of which is not to be found in any records of the kind up to this present war. In fact, "casualty lists" so full, so prompt, and detailed, have never appeared in this country before. But for the experience of the work of the Vienna War Office in the Austrian War of 1866, we would say that such information respecting killed and wounded after action was never furnished in any country. After Koniggrätz the names of officers and privates in every regiment were published in Vienna every week. The remarkable and disagreeable feature ever since the war began to the present day of the South African "lists" is the appearance under the head of "Missing" of battalions, companies, and batches of men of different regiments leaving us all in doubt and wonderment how they were taken, for there is seldom any satisfactory account of the manner in which these surrenders or captures were brought about or necessitated; and these casual entries of men "missing," "prisoners at Pretoria," and such corrections of previous entries must cause distress by reason of uncertainty.

The most important point brought out during the discussion on Sir Howard Vincent's able paper on his impressions of the war at the Royal United Service Institution on Monday was the absence in our Army of a proper appreciation of the value of entrenchments. Sir Howard Vincent deplored the fact that no efforts are made by our officers to protect their men under fire. We have much to learn from the Boers, Sir Howard thinks, under this head, and most of the speakers endorsed his view. Our troops, it is held, are apt to be too plucky, displaying no anxiety for self-protection. It is a feature which the able lecturer said that all must admire, but in face of modern arms of precision more is wanted. As discretion is the better part of valour, the time has arrived when it is necessary to keep in view the great lessons of the war, the first being that, under certain conditions, a proper system of entrenchments is even of more value than the best of fighting fitness. Sir Howard Vincent does not complain of our administrative services; he pronounces them excellent; but he does think that our arrangements of command and control in the field are too antiquated. Our generals fail, he suggests, from want of proper tuition and experience, due largely to the fact that our autumn manoeuvres are carried out in a half-hearted manner. With us pluck is expected to play too great a part, and to this fault most of our reverses in South Africa are to be attributed. Pluck may become foolhardiness. Pluck is a quality in which the Boers are entirely wanting; yet they have scored many successes. They have done this for two reasons: first, because their principles of command are sound; and secondly, because they thoroughly understand the value of mobility and defence. Their modes of warfare are crude from the European aspect, but they teach many lessons, and it is well that they should be fairly considered. Sir Howard Vincent has rendered a useful service to the Army, and all arms are indebted to him for raising a distinctly healthy discussion on many matters of vital importance. He had his audience entirely with him, for they seemed to recognise the soundness of his theories, his intention evidently being to assist reform, and not to raise factious criticism, of which we have had enough already.

It is surprising that Lord Rosebery in his speech at the dinner to Sir William MacCormac and Mr. Treves at the Reform Club on April 28, should have said that these eminent surgeons had gone out to South Africa for six months "to superintend the hospital and surgical arrangements of our Army," when long before they left this country the whole medical organisation of our base and field hospitals, and bearer companies had been already carried out by the Director-General, A.M.S., and his staff at the Medical Division of the War Office. It has been allowed on all sides that the medical arrangements were as complete as circumstances would allow, and never so efficiently effected as in the present South African campaign. The honour for this rests with the Army Medical Service and its head, and without in any way depreciating the skill and advice afforded to the Army surgeons by Sir William MacCormac and Mr. Treves, whether in the former instance by operations on the field, or in the latter by consultation with the Army surgeons, the eminent surgeons whose services were so well acknowledged had nothing to do with "the superintendence of the hospital and surgical arrangements of our Army."

The appointment of Mr. H. De la Bere as Assistant Accountant-General has given rise to great indignation at the War Office. He recently vacated his post as Director of the Army Clothing Factory, the care of the factory and the stores of Army clothing having been placed under military officers, whilst the accounts were transferred to the War Office, Pall Mall. Mr. De la Bere has been promoted over the heads of men with longer public service. The attention of Parliament will be drawn to the case.

It is not expected that any effect will be given to the pious resolution passed by the House of Commons on Tuesday night in favour of extending the provisions of the Compensation Act to men killed or injured in the war in South Africa. It is doubtful, indeed, whether soldiers or sailors would derive any benefit from such an extension. We understand, however, that during the week a memorial was promoted in the Lobby of the House of Commons in favour of granting pensions to the widows of those killed in the war. The memorial was promoted by Mr. William Allan, the member for Gateshead, and proposes that annual pensions should be bestowed upon the widows of the petty officers and seamen and of the non-commissioned officers and men who have already fallen, or who may be killed in South Africa, and it is suggested that this object might be attained by a short Bill in the present session. The memorial was very numerous signed and has already been submitted to Mr. Balfour. The reply of the First Lord of the Treasury is expected in the course of a few days, the right hon. gentleman having intimated that before expressing his view upon it he desired to submit the matter to his colleagues in the Cabinet.

In the current number of the Quarterly Review there is a singularly able and dispassionate article on the "North-West Frontier of India." The writer graphically portrays the evils of our see-saw policy in Afghanistan, and how admirably it plays into the hands of Russia, which, having a definite aim, plays a continuous game. He says, moreover, that we have had half a century in which to put our house in order on the frontier, and have signally failed in taking advantage of our opportunities. This is true of us elsewhere than in India, or the war in South Africa would not have so seriously damaged our military prestige during the first three months of the war. Railway development on the North-West has been far too slow, and little or nothing has been done to render Quetta and other strategic positions impregnable. Even more unfortunate have been our dealings with the independent tribes, summed up by a recent writer as "butcher and bolt." Of late we have returned to the wise policy of Lord Lawrence—it is to be hoped permanently. Instead of being a source of military weakness the border tribes are gradually being transformed into a source of strength. The suggestions of the Quarterly reviewer as to the organization of our Indian Army are somewhat novel. He has no faith in the forces raised in Bombay and Madras, their qualities not being such that they could be relied upon in times of stress. To be effective the Indian Army must be almost entirely recruited from the fighting races in the Punjab and North-West, and the proportion of English officers should always be large. This lesson, in spite of bitter experience, is one we are slow to learn, though the recent Indian Army order is a step in the right direction. The number of officers in all native regiments, whether infantry or cavalry, is to be increased by one, and by two when the present period of distress is over. Unlike most recent writers on the subject, the Quarterly reviewer has no great confidence in the loyalty of the Afghans, who, he says, would follow in the wake of the Russians should they attempt to invade India. On the whole, the article is not discouraging. What we want in India as well as in Pall Mall are organization and a definite aim. The development of science has done so much to aid defensive tactics that only criminal unpreparedness on our part should allow an invasion of India the smallest measure of success.

There is nothing like taking time by the forelock in the matter of military preparation. According to a Dover paper, if the French justify Mr. Stead's forebodings and try a coup de main, they will do well to be well armed with wire-nippers should they attempt to take Dover, as the trenches and approaches are provided with wire entanglements just laid down at the Castle.

A letter just received from Bloemfontein states that Lord Roberts inspected the Colt Gun Detachment on April 6, and expressed himself highly pleased with such a useful and mobile weapon. The exact words were "Just what we want." He had every detail taken down, and was much struck with its record of work during the Spanish American War. He desired to know from Major Edwardes, the officer in charge, how many Colts were ready and unappropriated, from which it is evident that in the Field Marshal's opinion this machine gun with its light Dundonald galloping carriage is the very weapon for South Africa. This coincides with the views already expressed by the experts at home, who have witnessed its death-dealing powers and elastic mobility. The Colt is undoubtedly the quick firer of future warfare.

Army Personal.

The Prince of Wales will hold a levée on behalf of the Queen at St. James's Palace, on Monday, the 28th inst., at 2 o'clock.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived in London yesterday from Ireland. His Royal Highness's fiftieth birthday was on Tuesday.

The Staff of the North West Frontier of India under the recent re-organisation, will be made up thus:

Major-Gen. C. O. Egerton, C.B., I.S.C. (commanding).

A.A.G., Major R. G. Egerton, Corps of Guides.

D.A.A.G., Capt. C. O. Swanston, 18th Bengal Lancers.

Commanding Peshawur District, Brig.-Gen. H. B. MacCall, C.B., late King's Royal Rifles.

D.A.A.G., Capt. T. Jermyn, 2nd Sikhs.

Commanding Derajat District, Brig.-Gen. W. Hill, I.S.C.

A.A.G., Major J. S. E. Western, 1st Punjab Cavalry.

D.A.A.G., Capt. V. B. Fane, 1st Punjab Cavalry.

Commanding Malakand Force, Brig.-Gen. A. J. F. Reid, C.B., I.S.C.

D.A.A. and Q.M.G., Capt. P. Malcolm, 4th Gurkhas.

Kohat-Kurram Force, Colonel on Staff Lieut.-Col. H. de la M. Hervey, I.S.C.

D.A.A.G., Capt. E. H. Cole, 11th Bengal Lancers.

As regards these commands, General Egerton has been appointed to officiate as Lieutenant-General Commanding the Punjab, and Brigadier-General MacCall is acting in command of the Peshawur District.

Lieut.-General Sir Gerald Graham, V.C., of Springfield, Bideford, who died on December 17, left personality valued at £4,625 15s. 4d. His residuary estate is to be divided between his sons Frank, Maxwell, and Walter.

Lieut.-General Sir George and Lady White were the guests of the Queen at Windsor Castle on Monday. Before his departure on Tuesday, Her Majesty invested Sir George with the Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order.

Lieut.-General Sir Archibald Hunter will not return to the command of the Quetta District. This is certain. Hence Major-General J. H. Wodehouse, C.B., R.A., now at Secunderabad, where he is officiating for Lieut.-General Tucker, is to take his place. The arrangement, however, is not to come off, it would appear, until General Tucker returns to India from South Africa. But what if General Tucker does not return to India at all? There seems little chance of his doing so, for his present temporary rank of lieutenant-general is certain, having regard to his seniority, to be confirmed, and then he would be disqualified for an Indian district. In all the circumstances we may expect to hear soon that General Wodehouse has been ordered to assume the duties of his new command at Quetta, and that somebody else has been selected to officiate for General Tucker at Secunderabad.

Major-General T. A. Cooke has been selected to command the camp at Salisbury Plain this summer. The force, made up of Militia battalions, is divided into three brigades. 1st Brigade: Colonel V. Hatton, C.B., late Grenadier Guards, commanding with Captain and Adjutant J. H. Lloyd, 1st Batn. King's Own Regiment, as brigade-major. 2nd Brigade: Colonel D. C. De Wend, late Duke of Wellington's Regiment, with Captain S. W. Scrase-Dickins, 2nd Batn. Highland Light Infantry, as brigade-major. 3rd Brigade: Colonel J. W. T. Hume, late Derbyshire Regiment, commanding. General Cooke, who commanded the 17th Lancers for four years, was A.A.G. at Indian Army Headquarters, 1890-94, and afterwards commanded a Second Class District in India for five years.

Major-General Sir William Nicholson, R.E., it was announced by telegram at the end of last week, had been replaced as military secretary to Lord Roberts. It was not stated, however, what the new employment was which General Nicholson was to take up. The Times on Tuesday gave an explanation from its special correspondent at Bloemfontein:—

"With reference to the appointment of a new military secretary to Lord Roberts, vice Major-Gen. Sir W. G. Nicholson, it is understood that the latter officer has been placed by Lord Roberts in charge of the transport accompanying the main advance. This it has been found necessary to reorganise, and the task, being one of exceptional difficulty, has not unnaturally devolved upon one of the most able and experienced officers in Lord Roberts's force. As, moreover, the work of reorganising such a mass of transport will occupy all Sir William Nicholson's time, it has, as a matter of course, been necessary to make a fresh appointment to the military secretaryship."

The Times of India, commenting on the generals who are conducting operations in our present war in South Africa, points out that most of them are considerably advanced in life, only one, General French, being under fifty years of age.

"It is certainly noteworthy," says our contemporary, "that the younger generals and commanders have met with most success, for to Lord Kitchener, who is only fifty years old, may be ascribed a large share in the conduct of the brilliant series of operations commenced by General French, which ended in the unconditional surrender of Cronje and his army. History, as a rule, tells us the same story. At thirty-two Alexander the Great was sighing that there were no more worlds to conquer. At twenty-six Napoleon Bonaparte was conducting his most brilliant campaign with the army of Italy; at thirty-four Wellesley had won the battle of Assaye, and twelve years later, after bringing the arduous Peninsular War to a successful conclusion, he was the conqueror of Waterloo. In 1805, of the French officers who commanded the corps destined for operations in Germany, only two, Augereau and Bernadotte, were over forty years of age, Napoleon himself, Lannes, Soult, and Ney were thirty-six; Davout was thirty-five, and Marmont thirty-one. Half of the divisional commanders were between thirty and forty, whilst only a single one was fifty. Compare this with the German officers, who, the historian Sloane tells us, 'had become venerable creatures of routine.' The Duke of Brunswick, commander-in-chief, 'a spendthrift, a loose liver, and a martinet,' was seventy-one; Mollendorf was over eighty; Karlkreuth was sixty-six; even the fiery Blucher was over sixty, and we are told that 'the Staff, having occupied itself for years with an absurd refinement and development of Frederick the Great's system, there were only a few of the younger officers who understood Napoleon's revolutionary tactics and strategy.'"

Colonel J. W. Webber, half-pay, who lately commanded the 18th Regimental District, Clonmel, with such marked ability and success, has, to the great satisfaction of all ranks, been appointed to the command of the Irish Militia Brigade at Aldershot for the drill season.

Colonel Bruce Hamilton, East Yorkshire Regiment, who went out to South Africa in October last as A.A.G. to Lieut.-General Sir Francis Clery, has been appointed to a brigade command—presumably the 21st Brigade, from which Major-General Maxwell was lately transferred to the command of the 14th Brigade.

Colonel F. S. Gwatkin, I.S.C., who was military secretary to Sir William Lockhart, acts in a similar capacity on the staff of General Sir Power Palmer during the time he officiates as Commander-in-Chief in India, Major J. M. Burt, R.G.A., Captain L. N. Beatty, 1st Bombay Lancers, and Lieutenant J. H. Watson, 13th Bengal Lancers, being A.D.C.'s, Captain G. de S. Barrows, 4th Bengal Cavalry, Interpreter, and Major A. G. Kay, R.A.M.O., medical officer.

The Queen has granted the use of a suite of apartments at Hampton Court Palace to Mrs. H. Stopford, widow of Lieut.-Colonel H. R. Stopford, 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards, who was killed at Modder River on November 28.

Colonel A. M. L. Mills, I.S.C., 37th Bengal Infantry (Dogras), is about to retire from the Service.

Colonel H. D. Hutchinson, I.S.C., Director of Military Education in India, comes home on nine months' leave on urgent private affairs.

One of the little band of unfortunate superseded colonels has been disposed of by the retirement of Colonel A. G. H. Church, formerly of the Manchester Regiment, who attained the age limit on Tuesday, and so became entitled to his pension of £500 a year. Of the four who stand senior to him Colonel C. F. Morton, late of the 14th Hussars, will be retired on November 7 next, under the age rule, and Colonel Thompson, late King's Dragoon Guards, on April 1, 1901. Colonel W. H. Lee, late of the Bays, will not be fifty-seven until December 9, 1903, and Colonel the Hon. W. J. Stewart, late 12th Lancers, not until February 7, 1906. Colonels Lee and Morton complete shortly their eighth year of non-employment.

Colonel F. Glennie, commandant of the School of Music, Kneller Hall, who comes under the terms of the age clause on June 10, is to be allowed to retain his appointment until December 10.

Colonel the Hon. H. Legge, retired list, late 9th Lancers, has been appointed to the command of the Royal Reserve Regiment of Lancers, which is being formed at Ballincollig.

Colonel M. E. Crofton, half-pay, late 2nd Batn King's Own Regiment, has been appointed to the Lines of Communication in South Africa. We are assured that false impressions exist as to the official action in Colonel Crofton's case, and that it was not the intention when he was placed on half-pay to recall him home discredited.

Lieut.-Colonel Lord Playfair, R.A., commanding the Militia and Volunteer Artillery in the Aberdeen sub-district, will command the Militia Artillery camp about to be formed at Buddon.

Lieut.-Colonel D. G. Shaw, 1st Punjab Cavalry has been appointed to the command of the Corps of Guides Cavalry, Lieut.-Colonel F. H. R. Drummond to that of the 1st Central India Horse, and Lieut.-Colonel W. H. Marshall to that of the 37th Bengal Infantry (Dogras).

Major R. H. Mahon, R.A., of the Indian Ordnance Department, was deputed to proceed to South Africa in charge of the stores of the Indian contingent last September, and landed in Natal in time to get to Ladysmith for the siege. Through this he passed unscathed. He has now returned to Simla and resumed his duties as Deputy Director-General of Ordnance.

Major E. J. M. Fasson, R.F.A., who went out to South Africa with an ammunition column, and was, on promotion, recently posted to the command of No. 6 Depot Battery at Seaforth, has been appointed A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Sir Herbert Chermiside.

Major F. S. Inglefield, 2nd Batn. East Yorkshire Regiment, who left England early in November last for South Africa and special service, has, on the reorganisation of the Staff, been selected for employment as Brigade-Major.

Major E. S. Urmston, 1st Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, has been appointed a Brigade-Major in South Africa.

Major E. C. Bethune, 16th Lancers, an A.A.G. on the Bengal establishment, went to South Africa in September last on the staff of the Indian contingent. This did not interfere with his position on the Indian staff establishment, but he has now been transferred to his old presidency, Madras. Not that Madras is likely to see him again, as he has been appointed second in command of his regiment, and as that will return to England when war is over in South Africa, 'h will be disqualified for the retention of his position on the Indian staff.

Major E. J. Phipps-Hornby, Sergeant Parker, Gunner Lodge, and Driver Glassen, all of "Q" Battery, R.H.A., are said to have been recommended by Lord Roberts for the Victoria Cross in recognition of their gallantry on the occasion of the disaster at Sanna's Post (Bloemfontein Waterworks). A letter has been received at Birmingham from Sergeant Parker, giving a description of the convoy disaster. He writes from Bloemfontein on April 1, and in the course of his letter says:—

"At daybreak we were wakened by shells dropping around us. We had only gone about 400 yards when we had to cross a drift. The convoy was over, and U Battery had the order to cross and come into action on the other side. The battery had only got to the bottom of the drift when the Boers swarmed down in thousands, pouring in an awful fire. Every man of U Battery except seven was either killed or taken prisoner with their guns. O Battery galloped harder than I have ever seen a battery move before, all mixed up with the cavalry. We went about 800 yards and then came into action. In galloping up my gun was turned over and every horse shot. I got up with No. 4 gun, and then we remained for three hours under a most terrible fire. In five minutes I had lost two complete detachments, and then there was only Gunner Lodge and myself to work two guns, he at one and I at the other. We remained at our guns, loading, laying, and firing by our two selves, and we brought our two guns out of action by ourselves and also assisted the wounded. For conspicuous gallantry on the field we are recommended for the Victoria Cross or the Distinguished Conduct Medal. We marched into Bloemfontein a sorry-looking lot, all smothered in blood, and nearly every horse wounded."

Major J. W. M. Macartney, retired list, late Dorsetshire Regiment, has been appointed D.A.A.G. Guernsey, vice Captain C. E. Spearman.

Major A. W. M. Wilson, 1st Batn. West India Regiment, is appointed D.A.A.G. at Bermuda.

Captain H. G. Ruggles-Brise, Grenadier Guards, who went to South Africa as Brigade-Major of the Guard's Brigade, has been appointed a D.A.A.G. on the reorganisation of the staff.

The death of Captain W. M. Marter, 1st Dragoon Guards, is deeply deplored by his brother officers at the front. A correspondent writes to us from Nells Drift, Orange State, on the 3rd ult.:—

"The 14th Brigade, 7th Division, has suffered an irreparable loss by the death of Capt. Marter, Brigade-Major, who was shot in the abdomen in the action of March 29. A brave soldier, cheery companion, and an ideal staff officer he indeed was; and every officer and man who came in contact with him deeply deplores his loss. Those who knew him intimately loved him as they could not fail to do. With his pipe in his mouth, and his usual smile on his face, he suddenly, as it seemed, tripped and fell on the battlefield, but only too soon was it apparent that the deadly Mauser bullet had done its work. While in hospital his thoughts were solely of others about him. Uncomplaining he was up to the end, and what to others would perhaps have seemed hard luck to Marter was but the fortune of war. He was a true soldier's son. Watson Cheyne operated, and Major Faunce, R.A.M.C., attended him devotedly; and there was not a medical officer in the brigade who would not have nursed him as a brother. How often has it been said 'It is always the best fellows who get hit,' and Marter was indeed one of them. He leaves a widow who has our heartfelt sympathy." It may be some consolation to the bereaved lady to learn that her husband was tended in his last moments with the care and attention that his charming and heroic character deserved.

Despatches from the front, dated February 21, contained mention of the gallantry of an officer in one of the Fusilier regiments, who, after receiving a mortal wound in the abdomen at the fight at Gun Hill, continued to direct the advance of his men under a terrific fire. The name of this brave man was not given at the time, but it now appears that it was Captain W. L. Thorburn, 2nd Batn. Royal Fusiliers. Her Majesty, having been made aware of the facts of the case graciously sent a message of condolence to his widow and mother, and asked for his photograph.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, April 28.

Gens. Rundle and Hamilton reached to-day Thaba N'chu after a march devoid of incident. High tribute paid to the leadership of Gens. Hart and Brabant in the recent operations, and to the qualities of the men composing their forces. Lord Roberts has expressed his great admiration of the excellent services rendered by Gen. Brabant, Col. Dalgety and the colonial forces under their commands, which have been worthy the best traditions of the British army, and have produced an excellent result.

A Boer commando from Northern Natal said to have left for Mafeking to assist in opposing Gen. Carrington's relief column.

Sunday, April 29.

The Boers being found to be in force both east and north of Thaba N'chu, Gen. French sent the 3rd and 4th Cavalry Brigades in the early morning to make a reconnaissance to the east. The artillery bombarded the Boer lines, and the mounted infantry made a further advance. Gen. De Wet made a vigorous attempt to turn our east flank but was checked. It was definitely ascertained that the enemy were in strong force both to the east and the north, their flanks being protected with good guns.

Monday, April 30.

Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton marched north from Thaba N'chu with a body of mounted infantry, and Major-Gen. Smith Dorrien's brigade. After covering about 10 miles he found himself confronted by a strong force of Boers under the personal command of Gen. Botha. The enemy were reinforced during the day, and, as the numbers near Thaba N'chu had sensibly decreased Lord Roberts ordered Lieut.-Gen. French to strengthen Gen. Hamilton in the course of the day. In the course of its advance Gen. Hamilton's force sustained losses in killed and wounded to the extent of 30 officers and men.

Major-Gen. Maxwell's Brigade occupied a row of kopjes between Vlakfontein and Schanskraal to the east of Karee Siding. He met with no opposition.

A despatch received from Mafeking, stated that on the 12th inst., "the garrison were most cheerful and everything was satisfactory. A determined attack of the Boers had been repulsed without loss on our side. The enemy were firing heavily into the town, but had simply been wasting ammunition."

A handsome memorial stone in honour of the late Col. de Villebois-Mareuil, with an inscription in French, has been carved and engraved at Kimberley, by order of Lord Methuen, to be erected over the gallant officer's grave at Boshof.

Tuesday, May 1.

Lieut.-Gen. French's cavalry, co-operating with Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton in front of Thaba N'chu, were to-day reinforced by Major-Gen. Broadwood's brigade, a battery of R.H.A., and an infantry brigade, commanded by Major-Gen. Bruce Hamilton. An attack was made during the day on the Boer position at Houtnek. Gen. Hamilton's object was to force a passage to the north of Houtnek, and he accomplished this by the rout of the enemy, who held the line of hills commanding both sides of the nek. Lord Roberts in a despatch to the War Office thus describes the operations:—

"Gen. Ian Hamilton met with considerable success yesterday and drove the enemy out of a strong position they had taken up at Houtnek with comparatively small loss to us. The Boers dispersed in several directions—namely, east and north, leaving 26 prisoners in our hands, including one commandant, and 16 other wounded men. Hamilton is now encamped at Jacobsrust. As his men needed rest after having been fighting for seven out of the last 10 days, I ordered a halt for to-day. Broadwood's Brigade of Cavalry arrived on the scene in time to afford valuable assistance by threatening the enemy's rear, and during the afternoon Ian Hamilton was joined by Bruce Hamilton's Brigade of Infantry. The enemy admit to having 12 killed and 40 wounded yesterday. Among the former is Lieut. Gunther, a German officer, belonging to the 55th Regiment; among the latter, Maximoff, the Russian commander of the Foreign Legion. Twenty-one out of 53 of the enemy's casualties occurred among the members of that legion. Two Frenchmen were among the killed. Hamilton speaks in high terms of the service performed by the 8th Hussars under Colonel Clowes, and a made-up regiment of lancers which came into Broadwood's brigade and assisted in making the Boers evacuate their position. The final stroke to the enemy's rout was given by the Gordons and two companies of the Shropshire Light Infantry cheering loudly when they got within 200 yards of the position. Kitchener's Horse is also spoken of in terms of praise."

Wednesday, May 2.

Lieut.-Gen. Tucker reported to be holding the hills at Karee Siding with a chain of pickets.

Four wagons loaded with ammunition, captured by the Boers at Thaba N'chu, recaptured by our troops, having stuck in the River Caledon.

Thursday, May 3.

Our forces to-day occupied Brandfort. The Boer army was under Gen. Delarey. The capture was effected by the combined movement of several British forces. Gens. Tucker and Pole-Carew, in the east and centre, co-operating with Gen. Hutton's Mounted Infantry on the west, took the Boers by surprise, and compelled them to beat a hasty retreat. Four thousand of the enemy had moved to Brandfort yesterday to oppose our advance. Gen. Tucker engaged them in a sharp artillery duel, in which he put two Boer guns out of action.

Friday, May 4.

A telegram from Lord Roberts issued by War Office:—

"Brandfort, May 3.

"We occupied Brandfort to-day without much opposition and without, I hope, many casualties. The 1st Brigade of Mounted Infantry covered the left flank, and the 14th Brigade of the 7th Division the right flank, supported by the 15th Brigade. Pole-Carew's Division advanced directly on Brandfort. The Boer Army, which was under the command of Gen. Delarey, retired in a north-easterly direction."

No news of any importance received from Natal during this week.

The War Office has issued an official statement of the casualties since the beginning of the war up to and including last week:—

Officers killed in action	...	...	...	218
" died of wounds	...	...	...	53
" died of disease	...	...	...	64
N.C.O.'s and men killed in action	...	...	...	2,062
" " died of wounds	...	...	...	492
" " died of disease	...	...	...	2,028
" " died accidents	...	...	...	48

Total deaths ... 4,965

Officers wounded	...	...	...	764
N.C.O.'s and men wounded	...	...	...	9,225

Total wounded ... 9,989

Note.—The number of deaths from wounds has been deducted from the total of wounded.

Officers missing and prisoners	...	...	...	171
N.C.O.'s and men missing and prisoners	...	...	...	3,925

Total missing and prisoners ... 4,096

Note.—Above number is the net total after excluding those who have been recovered, viz., 10 officers and 48 men. One officer and 41 men have died in captivity.

Grand total, 19,050.

In addition, 29 officers and 3,101 men have been sent home sick (as distinct from wounded), which brings the aggregate losses of the Army to over 22,000. On the other hand, a further number of officers and men have returned to duty from the hospitals.

The mortality from disease again shows an increase. It now stands at 42.1 per cent. of the total deaths.

Lord Roberts has divided the southern region of the Orange State into military districts, each under the administration of a military commissioner, armed with large powers.

After the publication of Lord Roberts's criticism on Spion Kop, Gen. Buller, according to the Central News correspondent at Bloemfontein, placed his resignation with Lord Roberts, who refused to accept it.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Warren arrived at Cape Town on Sunday, and has left to take up his appointment of Military Governor, Griqualand West.

The Matin expresses its gratitude to Lord Methuen for having had a tombstone erected over Col. de Villebois-Mareuil's grave, and says that Lord Methuen acted as an officer and a gentleman.

Sir Alfred Milner has written to the Mayor of Kimberley assuring him that the relief of Mafeking has not ceased to occupy attention, and that nothing has been left undone to secure the raising of the siege at the earliest possible moment.

THE IMPERIAL YEOMANRY AND CITY IMPERIAL VOLUNTEERS.

[WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.]

It is with very great pleasure that we present to our readers a plate representing the Imperial Yeomanry and the City Imperial Volunteers. These are two forces which embody the patriotism and zeal of the country at large and of the metropolis. In times of trial Englishmen have never failed to respond to the call of duty, and when the disaster of December 15 stirred the Empire to its depths, there were many in England who answered to the impulse of patriotism, and were ready to proceed to the seat of war. In deciding to constitute the corps of Imperial Yeomanry—a mounted infantry force more truly—the Government accomplished the wishes of many a citizen soldier and civilian well fitted to don the khaki. Months before this step was taken individual members of the Yeomanry force at home had gone out to South Africa, and embodied themselves as Volunteers in some of the constituted bodies in the field. Thus several members of the East Kent Yeomanry, finding the Government were yet unwilling to accept the services of Volunteers, went out at the beginning of the war and joined the South African Light Horse, greatly distinguishing themselves in the fighting on the Tugela. Being a force of mounted infantry, the Imperial Yeomanry Corps was constituted in companies and battalions. Through the commanding officers of Yeomanry regiments many men were embodied, and civilians passing the necessary qualifications were enrolled, the organisation being in companies of 115 rank and file with five officers, four companies constituting a battalion. The standard of physique is that for cavalry of the line, and the dress consists of Norfolk jacket with breeches and gaiters of khaki, precise uniformity not being exacted. The services of the Imperial Yeomanry in the Orange State under Lord Roberts and on the western border are too well known to call for recital here. The force is composed of picked men, and large numbers of gentlemen accustomed to hunting and athletics are serving with the corps. Some special contingents are embodied. Thus the Duke of Cambridge's Own is composed of gentlemen inspired by lofty patriotism, who have provided their own kit, mount, and cost of transport, and are devoting their pay to the succour of widows and orphans. One member of this force gave £600 to the Imperial Yeomanry Field Hospital. Paget's Horse, again, is constituted of four special companies of picked men of splendid physique, all practised riders and good shots; while Lord Loch's contingent comprises men of special South African or other colonial experience, old campaigners and the like, who have passed exceptionally severe tests, and have been trained as rough-and-ready horsemen by an experienced buck-jumper. One member of the corps came all the way from Klondyke to join it. The Earl of Dunraven's Corps of Sharpshooters may be expected to do especial service under Carrington.

The City of London Imperial Volunteers are a force in every way as remarkable as the Imperial Yeomanry, and, since their "baptism of fire" at Jacobabad, have been rendering excellent service in the campaign. The City has always been in the forefront of national endeavour and enthusiasm, and when the Commander-in-Chief confided to the Lord Mayor the duty of raising a corps the response was immediate and decisive. Originally there were to have been 1,000 metropolitan Volunteers, including 150 mounted infantry, but at the beginning of February the City had completely equipped and despatched 1,550 selected men, including 400 mounted infantry, with four Maxims; and the Honourable Artillery Company had furnished a field battery, with four Vickers-Maxim 12½ pr. quick-firers, which is admirably efficient. Thus the City Imperial Volunteers, who wear the khaki uniform, with hat turned up at the side, bearing the letters "C.I.V.," are a composite force. Colonel W. H. Mackinnon is in command, while the Earl of Albemarle is commanding officer of the infantry, Major G. McMicking of the Maxim battery, Colonel H. C. Cholmondeley of the mounted infantry, and Lieutenant E. W. Wellby of the Maxim gun section. Major-General Tucker, the Earl of Denbigh, Colonel Boxall, C.B., and Major the Hon. T. F. Fremantle, with other officers, threw themselves heart and soul into the work of organisation, and the business of equipment and transport was admirably managed. Great sums of money were subscribed for the work, and the Lord Mayor and the City officials were indefatigable in their work.

Very notable corps, therefore, are the Imperial Yeomanry and the City of London Imperial Volunteers, and well deserving of the country. Our illustration very successfully depicts the uniforms, and our readers may be glad to know that the original water-colour drawing, handsomely framed, has been handed over to the Daily Telegraph to be sold for the benefit of the War Fund of our excellent contemporary.

WITH THE ARTILLERY IN NATAL. - III

By CAPTAIN C. HOLMES WILSON, R.A.

After the capture of Monte Cristo on February 18, the Boers began to trek. They had a bridge over the river below Colenso, and by this they moved to the left bank. Now, if they could have been pursued at once, it is possible that the fighting which followed would never have happened. A considerable number had apparently gone. If those that remained could have been attacked immediately, the rest of the fighting might have resolved itself into a rear-guard action on the part of the Boers. When it was seen that the enemy had retired, the line of advance was changed and orders issued for a march through the kopjes opposite Colenso. On the 19th and 20th little way was made. Some desultory shelling was indulged in by the Boers. On the 21st a general forward movement was commenced. In the meantime the enemy had returned. Finding that they were not pursued, and that our troops were heading for Fort Wylie and the kopjes, they came back in considerable numbers and occupied the high ground about Grobler's Kloof and the hills to the east of it that command the road between Colenso and Pieter's Hill. The difficulty of the task was now self-apparent. It was no longer a question of pushing a beaten enemy who was retiring; we had now to face a well-defended defile that was flanked by a river and commanded by a mountain.

Viewed from a distance Fort Wylie and the kopjes behind it look like ant heaps on an open plain. In front of them the Tugela swerves in a semicircle round to the left. Behind them the gloomy heights of Grobler's Kloof and its off-shooting spurs surround and shut them in like sand dunes on the shore between mountains and the sea. From these the Boers had opposed our original advance on December 15, and from these on February 21 we started our attack on them. The line of advance lay parallel to the railway line between the river and Grobler's Kloof and the kopjes gave little protection to the troops that had crossed the bridge. Behind these both men and waggons were crowded for protection, whilst the high ground on which the Boers had placed their artillery commanded almost every corner. Shells from their field guns dropped behind the kopjes. Even the hospital was not safe, and it was a marvel how the men and waggons that had crossed the river escaped unscathed, so great was the crush and so scanty the cover. It was necessary now to secure the left before any advance could be made on the right. The Boers held the high ground, and their retreat could not be interfered with, as they could retire on two divergent lines if they happened to be pressed on either. On our left their line of communications ran over Van Reenan's Pass; on our left they could retire by the Helpmakaar road through Dundee on Majuba. Consequently if we pressed them in front they could threaten us on our left, and as we should have had to form front to a flank to oppose them, it was as well to face this difficulty first before attempting a forward move. Some of our artillery had crossed on the night of the 21st, 22nd, and the remainder followed in the night of the 22nd-23rd. The artillery positions on the left bank of the river were not good; when the guns were ordered across, however, no resistance, or practically next to none, appears to have been thought of. Our expectations in this direction were, however, rudely dispelled. The batteries that had crossed first, those of the 5th Division, were sniped during the night, and on the morning of the 22nd the Boer artillery began to fire into the batteries and transport waggons on both banks of the river. Against the fire the small kopjes, behind which our men were looking for cover, afforded little or no protection. Infantry, oxen, waggons, and mounted men had all to make the most of what protection they could get, and this against guns on Grobler's Kloof was small. During the night of the 22nd-23rd the heavy guns were sent across the pontoon, and in the morning the proceedings commenced with a heavy cannonade. At twelve o'clock the Boers began to reply in earnest, and from twelve to two they kept up an incessant fire, their shrapnel often bursting over the naval guns, which, however, fortunately suffered little loss. On the left of the Naval Brigade a 5in. gun had been placed to oppose a Boer gun which was enfilading the kopjes. This gun was quite in the open, and entirely exposed. Behind it there was a donga. At about one o'clock the Boer gun began to fire on the 5in., shell after shell bursting in front of it, but on each occasion when the smoke cleared away the detachment turned up unhurt. When they saw the flash of the Boer gun they ran to their donga, and as soon as the shell had burst they returned to the gun. In this way they got cover in a position which was otherwise quite exposed.

This was the way in which the artillery duel was carried on, and the result did not say much for the shrapnel fire of the Boers. It was a curious example of the way in which we persist in putting our position guns in the open when there was time to entrench them. At about 3 p.m. the bombardment increased in violence. The hill to be attacked was one of the offshoots of a spur of Grobler's Kloof. The top was flat and formed a plateau on which were two small kopjes that were held by the Boers. On the right of this there was another hill, which at the time was christened Railway Hill; this was beyond the limits of our attack, and an advance against it could not have been attempted from the positions that we held on the 23rd. It flanked the line of advance on the point of attack, and as was eventually proved, was the principal cause of our failure. On Terrace Hill, or Hart's Hill, as it was afterwards called, the ground rose abruptly to the crest where the glacis began. Up to this the advance appeared to be covered; beyond it, it was absolutely exposed, not only to the Boers in front, but to those on the flank. At 3 p.m. the batteries were warned that the attack would take place at 3.30. The 5th Brigade did not advance to the final assault until about half-past five. The Inniskillings led, and the Connaught Rangers were the support. When they reached the crest they encountered the flanking fire, and though they were gallantly led by the general officer commanding the brigade, they were forced to retire after the second attempt failed. It is impossible to appreciate the difficulties of this assault. If it had been a success it would have been passed on from generation to generation as a feat to be proud of in the annals of our arms. As it is, it is likely to be forgotten in the constant whirl of current events that is at present crowning our arms with such constant success. But never could Tennyson's famous lines be more aptly applied than they can be to the heroes who fell on February 23—"When shall their glory fade?" Never as long as the British Empire lasts. The Queen has just conferred a great honour on the Irish people. It is an honour well deserved after the splendid behaviour of the Irish soldiers in South Africa. They have fought heroically and have brought great distinction on their historical regiments.

During the night the men remained under cover below the crest of the hill and the wounded were left on the field. At daylight the artillery bombardment began afresh. The guns, however, were stopped by General Hart. A further advance was stopped, and the second stage of the action brought to a close.

Obituary.

NAVY.

Rear-Admiral Thomas Peere Williams Nesham, was found dead in an armchair in his room at the Royal Naval Hospital, Yarmouth, late on Tuesday evening. At the inquest the testimony of the hospital surgeon, who made a post-mortem examination, showed that death was due to heart disease, from which it was not suspected the Admiral suffered, and a verdict of "Death from natural causes" was returned. Entering the Navy in 1856, Admiral Nesham obtained his Lieutenant's commission in 1864. In 1876 he was promoted to Commander for services rendered during the operations in the Niger. In 1884 he was promoted to Captain, in 1892 he retired from active service, and in 1896 he received a Naval pension. As recently as Jan. 29 last, he was promoted to Rear-Admiral on the retired list.

Midshipman Lionel G. R. Lloyd, of the Doris, died on April 28, at Kimberley, of enteric.

He joined the Army Dec. 10, 1841; became Captain June 8, 1856; Lieutenant-Colonel June 30, 1862; Colonel June 30, 1867; Major-General Oct. 28, 1868; and Lieutenant-General Dec. 31, 1878. He served in the Gwalior campaign, 1843-44, including the battle of Maharajpore (bronze star); also in the Sutlej campaign (severely wounded, medal).

Major-Gen. Talbot B. M. Glascock, Colonel, retired list, I.S.C., died at his residence, St. Ronans, Silverdale Road, Burgess Hill, on the 27th ult., aged 61. The deceased, who retired Oct. 5, 1887, served in the Indian Mutiny, 1857-59, including the siege and capture of Lucknow; Rohilund Campaign, Oude Campaign, and operations in Bundelcund (medal with clasp); in the Bhootan Expedition, 1865-66 (medal with clasp); and the Afghan War, 1878-80, with Zaimusht Expedition (medal).

Col. William Aldworth Horne Hare, R.E., died at 128, Cromwell Road, S.W., on the 29th ult., aged 53. He was second son of the late Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Richard Hare, and, joining the Royal Engineers Jan. 15, 1867, became Captain Sept. 13, 1879; Major Nov. 23, 1886; Lieutenant-Colonel April 4, 1893; and Colonel April 4, 1898. He retired last year. He had seen no active service, but had passed the Staff College. He was employed on special service, Turkey, Syria, and Cyprus, 1876-78; with the Turkish Boundary Commission, 1879; and was D.A.Q.M.G., Intelligence Branch, Horse Guards 1881-86.

Col. Ralph Ouseley, retired list, I.S.C., died at Dehra Doon, N.W.P., India, on the 11th ult., aged 71. He joined the Army, June 11, 1847; became Captain Feb. 18, 1861; Major June 11, 1867; Lieutenant-Colonel June 11, 1873; and Colonel May 5, 1877. He served throughout the Punjab Campaign, 1848-49, including the affair of Ramnuggur, and battles of Sadoolapore, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat (medal with two clasps); served in the Indian Military Campaign, 1857-58; present at the Mutiny at Lucknow, and throughout the defence of the Residency and subsequent operations in Gwalior, battle of Cawnpore, occupation of Futtehpoore, and siege and capture of Lucknow. Performed the duties of an artillery officer and had charge of one 18-pr. and two 9-prs. at Gubbins' outpost during the defence of the Residency, from July to November, 1857 (twice mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, and a year's service.)

Col. Robert Reid, Captain, retired list, late Staff Officer of Pensioners, died at Tisbury Road, Hove, on the 30th ult., aged 74. He joined the Army June 23, 1843; became Captain April 10, 1857; Major July 5, 1872; Lieutenant-Colonel Dec. 31, 1878; and Colonel Oct. 1, 1881. He served in the Punjab campaign 1848-49 (medal); also with the flank companies 98th Regiment in the force under Sir Colin Campbell at the forcing of the Kohat Pass in February, 1850. Served in the Peshawur Expeditionary force on the Eusofzai Frontier under Sir Sidney Cotton in April and May, 1858 (medal with clasp).

Col. Arthur Francis Bingham Wright, Captain, retired list, late 101st Fusiliers, died at South Stoke, near Bath, on the 28th ult. He joined the Army March 22, 1855; became Lieutenant Feb. 1, 1856; Captain Feb. 14, 1872; and retired with the rank of Major Oct. 31, 1877. He was long associated with the 9th Regiment, and was for years its adjutant, until promoted by selection into the 101st in 1872. After retirement he settled at Bath, and commanded the local Volunteer Battalion, which he raised to a high standard of efficiency, and retired with the rank of Colonel.

Major Francis Henry Toovey Hawley, Royal Scots Greys, died at Bloemfontein, after three days' illness, on the 28th ult. The eldest son of the late Gen. R. B. Hawley, C.B., Colonel Commandant King's Royal Rifles, he was born August 10, 1860, and joined the Greys as 2nd Lieutenant Aug. 11, 1880; becoming Lieutenant June 29, 1881; and Captain Oct. 1, 1887. He was Adjutant Jan. 18, 1892, to Jan. 17, 1896; and became Major April 3, 1897.

Major Kenneth Ross Mackenzie, 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders, who has been "missing" since the battle of Magersfontein on Dec. 11, is now reported as dead, it being presumed, as no information can be obtained with regard to him, that he was killed and buried by the Boers. Born May 3, 1855, the eldest son of the late Charles Douglas Mackenzie, 38, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, he joined the 71st Highland Light Infantry as Sub-Lieutenant, Aug. 9, 1873, and was transferred to the 78th Highlanders Nov. 12, 1873, becoming Captain March 27, 1883, and Major Sept. 2, 1891. He served in the Afghan War, 1879-80, with the Transport Department (medal), in the Hazara Expedition, 1888 (medal with clasp), Hazara Expedition, 1891 (clasp), and Chitral Expedition, 1895, with relief force, including the action at Mamagai (medal with clasp).

Commissary John L'Estrange Lenny Buchanan, retired list, Commissariat and Transport Department, died on the 2nd inst., at 2, Tavistock Road, Westbourne Park, W., aged 73. He was youngest son of the late Col. Gilbert Buchanan, R.E., and served in the Commissariat Department in the Eastern Campaign, 1855-56, being present at the siege of Sebastopol, including the attacks of June 18 and Sept. 8 (medal with clasp and Turkish medal).

Major E. M. Showers, of Lumsden's Horse, was killed in action with Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton's force on the 30th ult. A son of Major-Gen. Sir G. D. Showers, I.S.C., he was educated at Cheltenham and passed afterwards into the Indian Police. On the raising of Lumsden's Horse he at once volunteered for service, and his offer was readily accepted on account of his exceptional qualifications and great popularity.

Capt. Herbert Foster Wentworth Stanley, 9th Lancers, died of wounds received in last week's fighting at Bloemfontein on the 28th ult. Born July 2, 1863, he joined the 9th Lancers as 2nd Lieutenant Feb. 26, 1887; became Lieutenant Nov. 21, 1888; and Captain Sept. 5, 1894.

Captain Arthur Buckley Bennet, 2nd Batn. Royal Warwickshire Regiment, died at Bloemfontein, on the 27th ult., of peritonitis. Born June 6, 1866, he was educated at Cheltenham, and joined the Cheshire Regiment as Lieutenant Aug. 25, 1886, and was promoted to a company in the Royal Warwickshire Regiment April 6, 1898. He served in the Burmese Expedition 1887-89.

Captain Francis Edward Dowler, formerly of the 52nd Light Infantry, died at 15, James Street Mansions, W., on the 29th ult., aged 60.

Capt. Charles Thomas Biddulph, 3rd Batn. Leinster Regiment, died of enteric fever on active service at the Cape on the 26th ult.

Capt. George Percy Brasier-Creagh, I.S.C., who was wounded in the operations in the Orange State last week, died at Bloemfontein on the 27th ult. Born Sept. 4, 1864, he joined the East Surrey Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant from the Militia May 14, 1884; was transferred to the Indian Staff Corps March 20, 1886; and became Captain May 14, 1886. He was A.D.C. to the Viceroy of India, 1889-94. He served as Sir William Lockhart's orderly officer in the second Miranzai Expedition (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp). Also served in the Isazai Expedition of 1892, and in the Chitral Expedition, 1895, with the relief force (medal with clasp); and in the operations on the North-West Frontier, 1897-98, with the Malakand Field Force, including the action of Landakai, and with the Tirah Field Force (mentioned in despatches, clasp).

Lieut. Denis Jerome Murch, R.H.A. ("Q" Battery), died at Bloemfontein on the 25th ult. from the effects of wounds received at Sanna's Post, March 31. Born Dec. 4, 1874, he joined the Royal Artillery June 15, 1895; and became Lieutenant June 15, 1898.

Lieut. Francis Sandham Geary, 2nd Batn. Hampshire Regiment, was killed in the fighting round Thaba N'chu on the 27th ult. Born Feb. 10, 1874, the son of Lieut.-General H. Le G. Geary, C.B., R.A., he joined the Hampshire Regiment Oct. 10, 1894; and became Lieutenant Aug. 14, 1897.

Lieut. Thomas Butler Ely, 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, died at sea on board the Oreana, on passage home from South Africa. Born Sept. 19, 1875, he joined the Royal Dublin Fusiliers as 2nd Lieutenant Dec. 1, 1897; and became Lieutenant Oct. 9, 1899.

2nd Lieut. Stanley Reay Theobald, 9th Lancers, was killed in action near Thaba N'chu on the 28th ult. Born Sept. 9, 1877, he was appointed 2nd Lieutenant Sept. 8, 1897.

2nd Lieut. John Tracton Dennis, 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, died at Aliwal North on the 2nd inst. of enteric fever. Born in 1878, he joined the Royal Dublin Fusiliers Nov. 4, 1899.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—The field escort under command of Lieut.-Col. Miles, which did duty in Dublin during the Queen's visit, returned to Windsor on Saturday. The men made a great impression, it is said, "by their turn-out when on duty, and soldierly bearing when in the streets and public places."

2nd Life Guards.—Capt. Ellison and Lieut. Champion de Crespigny left Cape Town on the 26th ult. in the Britannia for England, invalided. Capt. Lord Kensington received, we regret to learn, a Hamilton's wound in the back in Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton's action on Monday.

5th Dragoon Guards.—Capt. Darbyshire arrived home from the Cape on Monday in the Assaye, invalided.

7th Dragoon Guards.—The regiment has come under fire at the Cape, for it is officially reported that in the fighting on Saturday last, near Thaba N'chu, "2nd Lieut. Vaughan was wounded dangerously, but his case is hopeful." 2nd Lieut. Vaughan was appointed to the regiment just before its embarkation from a Captaincy in the Royal Marmouthshire Engineer Militia. The Reserve Squadron moved on Monday from Aldershot to Shorncliffe.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—Capt. Adams gets the Majority vacant by the death of Major Hawley. 2nd Lieut. Long is on passage home from the Cape, invalided. He left on the 21st ult. in the Lismore Castle.

4th Hussars.—Lieut.-Col. Ramsay has been granted an extension of command for twelve months from the 13th inst., and is about to be promoted to the rank of Brevet-Colonel. Major Hoare, who was to have joined the staff of Sir George Luck as military secretary, has been obliged to take leave to England, and is not, therefore, able to take up the appointment.

6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons.—Mrs. Edmund Allenby, of Donhead House, Salisbury writes "That the Inniskillings have cabled home for more clothing and tobacco, and that she will be most grateful for any contribution in clothing or funds to be sent to her not later than May 20."

7th Hussars.—The remainder of the regiment moved on Tuesday from Norwich to Aldershot. It is quartered in the South Cavalry Barracks.

8th Hussars.—If the regiment has seen no service since the Indian Mutiny, it evidently does not intend to be behind others now that its chance has come. It took part in the action under Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton at Houtnek on Tuesday, when it distinguished itself to such an extent that Lord Roberts in his despatch of the 2nd inst., says:—"Hamilton speaks in high terms of the service performed by the 8th Hussars under Col. Clowes." 2nd Lieut. Levisne, just appointed to the regiment from the 6th Batn. Rifle Brigade, has succeeded to the baronetcy by the death of his father, Sir William Levisne.

9th Lancers.—Lieuts. Lord C. Bentinck, Beale-Brown, Bell, and Allhusen, all get promotion by the death of Capt. Stanley. Lord Bentinck and Lieut. Beale-Brown as seconded officers, Lieut. Bell as Adjutant, and Lieut. Allhusen on the establishment. Promotion has been very slow in the regiment during the last five years. Lieut. Kincaid-Smith sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Braemar Castle, invalided.

10th Hussars.—Major Alexander received a severe wound in the back in Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton's action on Monday. Lieut. Barry gets his troop, vice Capt. Sir John Millbanke, Bart., who is seconded for staff service. Lieut. Crichton, who has been lying ill from enteric at Pretoria, is now out of danger. He was in a wagon under medical care when the convoy was captured at Sanna's Post.

11th Hussars.—Lieut. FitzGerald has arrived at Cape Town from Egypt on special service.

13th Hussars.—Capt. MacLaren was "doing well" at Mafeking when Col. Baden Powell sent his last message off on the 13th ult.

14th Hussars.—Headquarters and A and C Squadrons, which were with Sir Redvers Buller's force in Natal during the operations for the relief of Ladysmith, have now moved to the Cape, and the whole regiment under Lieut.-Col. Hamilton's command forms part of the cavalry division under Lieut.-Gen. French.

16th Lancers.—Major Bethune has been appointed second in command, vice Major Frewen, promoted to the command. 2nd Lieut. Neave is returning home in the Kildonan Castle, invalided, having left Cape Town on the 25th ult.

17th Lancers.—Major the Hon. L. H. D. Fortescue becomes second in command, vice Major Herbert, promoted to the command, Capt. Warner getting the Majority.

20th Hussars.—Lieut. Bott has been granted leave from India to England for nine months on medical certificate.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. J. A. Coxhead, and Lieut. T. M. Archdale, R.F.A., left Cape Town on the 21st ult. for England in the Lismore Castle, invalided.

Lieut.-Col. E. C. F. Holland has been appointed to the command of the Brigade Division at Shorncliffe, on promotion.

Major F. A. Curteis, R.G.A., arrived from the Cape on Monday in command of invalids, in the Assaye.

Capt. A. F. Wynter, D.S.O., R.G.A., is officiating as Station Staff Officer, 1st Class, Bellary.

Lieut. R. W. Dale, District Officer, has been appointed Adjutant of the West of Scotland Militia Artillery.

2nd Lieut. H. H. Kelly from S.M.E. Chatham to Malta.

2nd Lieut. B. Burgess from S.M.E. Chatham to St. Helena.

2nd Lieut. C. C. de la Beresford from S.M.E. Chatham to Curragh.

2nd Lieut. P. H. French at Chatham, ordered to Esquimaux.

2nd Lieut. W. H. Johnston from S.M.E. Chatham to Gibraltar.

Lieut.-Col. M. C. Barton has been appointed to the command of the Bengal Sappers and Miners.

Lieut.-Col. H. S. Andrews-Speed has been appointed Commanding R.E., Madras.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Lieut.-Col. Crabbe, having recovered from his wounds, has resumed command of the 3rd Batn. at Bloemfontein. Capt. Pereira gets his Majority, vice Major Cooper, promoted to the Lieutenant-Colonelcy of the 1st Batn. Irish Guards. Capt. Tryon, 3rd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 25th ult. in the Kildonan Castle, invalided.

Coldstream Guards.—Major Monok, 2nd Batn., and Capt. Feilding, and Lieut. and Adj. Matheson, are on passage home invalided. They sailed from Cape Town on the 25th ult., in the Kildonan Castle.

Irish Guards.—It is officially notified that recruits can now be accepted for the regiment, the 1st Batn. of which is in process of formation, and will have its first station at Kensington Barracks, not at St. John's Wood, as was previously ordered. The officers appointed in Tuesday's Gazette are all Irishmen. Lieut.-Col. Cooper comes from Connaught, Major Hamilton is a cousin of the Duke of Abercorn, Brevet-Major Vandeleur, D.S.O., hails from County Clare, Lord Kerry is the eldest son of Lord Lansdowne, and Lord Oxmantown is the eldest son of the Earl of Rosse.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Major Barton, 2nd Batn., left Cape Town for England in the Lismore Castle on the 21st ult., invalided.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Major Stewart has been appointed second in command of the 2nd Batn. in South Africa.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Major Mockler has been appointed second in command of the new 4th Batn. at Colchester.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—The Colonelcy is vacant by the death of Gen. Sir R. Wilbraham, who was appointed as far back as Sept. 15, 1881. Sir Richard Wilbraham joined the regiment as a Captain from half-pay of the Rifle Brigade April 6, 1839, and remained with it until Dec. 22, 1854, when he was promoted to a half-pay Lieutenant-Colonelcy. 2nd Lieut. Packe, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Britannia, invalided.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—Capt. Peebles, 2nd Batn., left Cape Town on the 27th ult. for England, invalided, in the Braemar Castle.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Major Sladen, who was officially reported to be seriously ill at the Cape, is now out of danger, and will shortly, it is understood, return home.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Capt. Pearson, 1st Batn., is on passage home from South Africa, invalided, in the Braemar Castle, which sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. Lieut. Tomlin, 1st Batn., has arrived home from the Cape this week, invalided.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Lieut. Charlton, 1st Batn., who was wounded at Spion Kop, has been awarded the medal of the Royal Humane Society for saving life in October last, when stationed in Crete. It has now been ascertained that Col.-Sergt. W. Evans, 2nd Batn., reported missing after the action at Spion Kop, Jan. 24, is a prisoner of war at Pretoria.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Brevet-Major Bowes, D.A.A.G., Bombay Establishment, has been appointed Officiating D.A.A.G., Bombay Army Headquarters.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Devonport on Wednesday for Salisbury Plain. 2nd Lieut. Rycroft, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Lismore Castle, invalided.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Capt. Safford, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months on medical certificate.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—2nd Lieut. Ridings sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Britannia, invalided.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd).—Major Teale has arrived home from the Cape this week, invalided.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd).—Lieut. Carmichael has arrived home from the Cape this week, invalided.

Border Regiment (34th).—Lieut. and Adj. MacNab is on passage home from the Cape, invalided. He left in the Lismore Castle on the 21st ult.

Black Watch (42nd).—Major Burton has passed the examination qualifying for regimental command.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (47th).—Lieut. Bowen is en route from the Cape, invalided, having left on the 21st ult. in the Lismore Castle.

Essex Regiment (56th).—Capt. Dowding has been appointed Officiating Station Staff Officer, Rangoon, vice Major Copeman, Suffolk Regiment, officiating on the District Staff, Madras.

Northamptonshire Regiment (58th).—Capt. Free-land has arrived home from the Cape this week, invalided.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—The date of assembly of the 7th (Militia) Batn. had to be changed at the last moment. It will now muster on Tuesday next, and proceed to Aldershot, as previously arranged.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—Captain Georges is on passage home from the Cape, invalided.

Hampshire Regiment (67th).—Lieut. French is on passage home from the Cape, invalided.

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—Capt. Harter is on passage home from the Cape in the Lismore Castle, invalided. He left on the 21st ult.

East Surrey Regiment (70th).—2nd Lieut. Alexander arrived home from the Cape on Monday in the Assaye, invalided. A correspondent of the Times, who witnessed the arrival of the Assaye, says:—

"Lieut. Alexander, of the East Surrey Regiment, evidently has a career before him. He was wounded at Mooi River, Colenso, and Spion Kop, and altogether has had 'seven holes' made in him by bullets. Spion Kop was the 'warmest' affair of the lot, he says. He was only twenty years old a few days ago, but he has already been three times mentioned in despatches and is recommended for the D.S.O. The worst of his wounds, which included the smashing of three ribs, is not yet fully healed, but otherwise he is in excellent health, and looking forward to being fit for duty before long."

Seaforth Highlanders (72nd).—The detachment which has been forming the British garrison of Khartoum has returned to Cairo.

Black Watch (73rd).—Lieut. Wauchope, who was wounded at Magersfontein, arrived home from South Africa on Monday last, in the Assaye. Lieut. Harvey is on passage home from the Cape, invalided.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—In Tuesday's flanking movement between Thaba N'chu and Karee

Siding, Capt. Towse and 50 Gordons were surrounded by 250 Boers, who demanded their surrender. The special correspondent of the Daily News states that Capt. Towse ordered his men to fix bayonets and charge. The Gordons, with a wild cheer, rushed at the enemy and swept them away with great slaughter. Capt. Towse throughout behaved most heroically.

Middlesex Regiment (77th).—The ball given at the Hôtel Métropole on Tuesday night, in aid of the sick and wounded of the battalion was, in every sense, a great success, and reflected no little credit on Miss Mortimer, by whom, in conjunction with Major Longe and Capt. Mortimer, it was arranged. The guests, who numbered nearly 300, comprised many officers of both services. The Duke of Cambridge, who has taken much interest in the ball, was unable to be present owing to a prior engagement, but expressed, in a letter, his regret at being unable to attend. Dancing began at 10.30, and terminated at an early hour on Wednesday morning. Mr. Hubert Delma's orchestra was in attendance. Everything passed off admirably, and those present are all agreed as to the excellence of the arrangements.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Lieut. Wilson has arrived home from the Cape this week, invalided.

Cameron Highlanders (79th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Aldershot on Monday for Mullingar, where it has taken over quarters.

Royal Irish Rifles (83rd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will assemble on Monday the 14th inst. instead of Saturday, the 12th inst., and the 4th (Militia) Batn. on Thursday next instead of Tuesday next.

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—Lieut. Atchison is on passage home from the Cape, invalided.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Lieut. Forbes is on passage home from the Cape, invalided.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—The Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava and Mrs. Sharman-Crawford write to say that, as it is intended to send off immediately the last consignment of warm clothing and field-glasses (which are urgently required) to the Royal Irish Rifles in South Africa, it is earnestly requested that any intending subscribers should send in their contributions at once. Parcels sent care of County Down Weaving Company, 1, Donegal Square, South Belfast, and subscriptions to Mr. E. A. Spiller, Belfast Bank, Belfast, who is kindly acting as treasurer, will be gratefully received and promptly acknowledged. Major Adye, who was taken prisoner at Nicholson's Nek, and has since been dangerously ill at Pretoria, sailed from Cape Town on the 25th ult. for England in command of invalids, in the Kildonan Castle.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (89th).—Lieut. Haire-Forster is en route from the Cape, invalided. He sailed in the Lismore Castle on the 28th ult.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (93rd).—Major Aiken has passed the examination qualifying for regimental command.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—After the special notice taken by the Queen of the valour of the Irish regiments, Col. Saunderson, M.P., wrote to the officers commanding the two battalions to express the admiration which he, in common with all loyal Irishmen, felt for the magnificent courage of those under their command. In their reply both officers mention that Col. Saunderson's letter had been published in the battalion orders. Lieut. Col. A. Mills, writing from Colenso, on March 29, adds:—"Though not an Irishman myself by birth, I am one in heart, and I am delighted to think that the way in which Irish regiments have behaved during the war will prove to the world that her Majesty has no more loyal and true soldiers than those in her Irish regiments." Major Shadforth has left the depot and sailed for South Africa in command of reinforcements in the Orotava.

Reviews.

SOME MAGAZINES.

Perennial Blackwood is as full of literary spirit and critical vigour as ever in its most palmy days. There is an article upon the Intelligence Department by Major-Gen. F. S. Russell, which is good reading, but to which we may refer in another place. The despondent critic of the war continues his attack and his exposition of failures and lost opportunities, and for him also we may find a larger place than this column will afford. But, apart from these, Blackwood is very full of interest. There is high praise for the first volume of Mr. Andrew Lang's new History of Scotland. Mr. David G. Churcher, who was an indigo planter and merchant at Fategarh at the beginning of the Indian Mutiny, gives a most dramatic story of his experiences. A mutiny broke out at the neighbouring station of Aligarh, but the 10th Native Infantry stood true for a time and showed no disposition to fraternise with the mutineers. At length the English at Fategarh took to their boats, and after terrible experiences, reproaching themselves for not having risked the passage to Cawnpore, were emboldened to return. Then came the mutiny of the 10th, and Mr. Churcher had a most adventurous escape through many perils. He gives a stirring account of the defence of the fort, of the intrepid character of the soldiers, the bravery of the ladies, and finally of the inability to continue the defence. Then came the destruction of the ammunition, the spiking of the guns, and the taking once more to the boats. Disasters followed, and a desperate situation, with hiding in the cane fields, and a return once more to Fategarh. It is a most striking story, and makes one of the best papers in Blackwood. The number also contains the "Diary of a Boer before Ladysmith," and a fine appreciation of the high qualities of those two great soldiers, Donald Stewart and William Lockhart. We have taken up last month's Blackwood again, which was well worth reading. Its opening article, "Russia's Sea-power," painted not only Europe but the world in Cossack uniform. The writer handed over the dominion of the earth by land and sea to the Czar, accepting the theories of Mr. Jane that it would be the best policy for England to make friends with Russia as a very dangerous and insufficient measure, and warmly advocating Col. Bell's alarming views respecting the future omnipotence of Russia. The writer in Blackwood gave a sufficiently formidable programme of the Naval power which would be at the disposal of the Czar in a few short years, without indicating precisely on what lines England is to frame a policy which shall frustrate the designs of her great enemy. It is not enough to say "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," but we cannot accept as a conclusive settlement of all the aims and ambitions of the States of the world that they are to be enveloped, as Bismarck said, in a Muscovite cloak.

The new Quarterly Review opens with a tribute to its late editor, the Rev. Whitwell Elwin, who succeeded Lockhart in 1853, resigned his editorship in 1880, and lately died at the age of 83. There is a very timely article entitled "An Age of Extermination," embodying a protest against the destruction of game throughout the world, which it is earnestly to be hoped may be stopped before it is too late. Against such greed of slaughter as has taken place in Western America even the prodigality of nature is powerless, and the wild animals are being driven back and reduced more and more. South Africa is grievously threatened, and it is ample time, as M. Foa has suggested, that a Zoological Peace Conference should meet to enact some preventive measures. An article of great practical interest is upon Sir John Macdonald and his work in Canada. What that great statesman achieved in the way of Federation is well-known, and his Imperial policy was triumphantly justified. He fostered local patriotism without permitting it to become provincial, and, as the Reviewer says, to combine local and Imperial interests was perhaps the greatest mark of his genius. A weighty contribution is upon "North-West Frontier Policy," and the Reviewer most cogently urges that the time is ripe for energy, and that we must keep our powder dry, for already the cloud no bigger than a man's hand has risen, and we must ask ourselves whether we are ready in case it should burst. The Quarterly Reviewer discusses the local conditions of defence on the frontier, and points out some things that he considers defective. He does not believe in the policy of staking our hold on India on one or two great battles on the Helmund. He has no faith in the pacific utterances of Russia, and urges that in case of war we should need an additional 50,000 British troops in India. We must entirely reorganise the Native army, obtaining money by reducing the useless southern troops, and must improve the frontier communications, fortify the passes, increase and modernise our artillery, double the number of British officers with Native regiments, and do much else, extending our influence also over the tribes, without being drawn into a policy of adventure in Afghanistan. "From a defeat at Magersfontein or Colenso the nation can recover, but a crash at Quetta or at the mouth of the Khyber might bring down the Empire in India." The Quarterly also includes a favourable review of Sir Herbert Maxwell's "Wellington," in which, however, many curious minor errors are pointed out. These are such as can be removed in another edition by a careful proof reader.

We have also received Longman's, the Cornhill, Macmillan, and the Humanitarian, as well as a good number, well illustrated, of the Pall Mall Magazine (including an article by Mr. Walter Wood on the "Army and its Badges"), the Century, Illustrated Magazine, and some others.

We have before us further parts, up to No. 5, of Messrs. Methuen's History of the Boer War. There is something very satisfactory in its appearance, for it is well printed and well illustrated, though it does not bear the character of a picture book. It is also well written, though the author's name does not appear. What will be the extent of the book it is, of course, impossible to predict, but it must make several volumes, and when bound will, we think, be found satisfactory by the general reader.

Under the title of Four Months Besieged, Messrs. Macmillan and Co. will publish immediately a volume of letters written from Ladysmith by Mr. H. H. S. Pearce, the special correspondent of the Daily News. The letters were written to that paper, but owing to exigencies of space, and the inevitable delay in transmission, only very few of them could be utilised, so that the greater number will be published for the first time. The volume will be illustrated by plans and photographs made by the writer on the spot.

The war has already given a great stimulus to art production, and many pictures illustrative of incidents, and of the troops engaged, have found eager purchasers. They appeal to many tastes, but none are of a higher class than those which Messrs. Graves have published. The "Absent-minded Beggar" and the "Handy Man"—both reproduced from the brush of Mr. Caton Woodville—are famous, and the choice remarque proofs are destined to become valuable, while the India prints are also of high pictorial merit. A new plate has just appeared forming a centrepiece, as we may say, to the other two. It is entitled "Our Brothers from Over the Seas," and represents a dramatic incident in battle, in which are typical figures illustrating the new South Wales Lancers, the Imperial Light Horse, the Diamond Fields Horse, the Imperial Canadian Infantry, the Rhodesian Field Force, the various Australian troops, and some other Colonial forces. Nothing has been so remarkable in the history of the war as the spontaneous outburst of Imperial enthusiasm to which it has given rise, and Mr. Caton Woodville's new work is an admirable expression of that spirit. It cannot fail to be widely popular, and has been reproduced with admirable skill in photogravure and mezzotint by Mr. W. A. Cox, who did the work upon the other plates. A special feature is made of the remarques in the margin, which are a bugler blowing the call, and the heads of "Diamond Jubilee" Colonial premiers and Colonial officials.

THE SERVICE RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—An ounce of practice, we are told, is worth a ton of theory. I am convinced of the truth of this reasoning by reading the letter signed "W. A. Baillie-Grohman" in your last issue. Your correspondent seeks to make out that our present rifle, the Lee-Metford, has been proved to be a failure on service in South Africa. Now I think I know something of musketry—I ought to at any rate—and I have had some months' experience of active service and hard fighting recently in Natal. It may interest Mr. Baillie-Grohman to learn that nothing that came under notice in the field in any way justifies his condemnation of the rifle now in the hands of the troops. I never heard it spoken badly of, and I certainly should have done if it had been as bad, or anything like as bad, as he would seem to make out.

It is all well and good to say that the Lee-Metford rifle is a failure. It has not proved itself to be this in the severe trial it has undergone, and even if it had I think that the condemnation ought to come from British generals and regimental officers, who to my knowledge have had no serious complaint to make. Mr. Baillie-Grohman's letter doubtless was intended to draw attention to a subject which is uppermost in his mind, but it only serves to show how easy it is for people to take a one-sided view and to argue from the standpoint of theory with no practical experience to guide them. I am in position to pronounce an actually independent judgment, and I say unhesitatingly that I shall be surprised when the campaign is over if any general officers now in the field condemn the Lee-Metford rifle. They may, of course. I may be all wrong in my view; at the same time so may your correspondent. At present, however, no one can decide, and I would beg your readers to reserve their judgment until they know what that of the generals is. I say this the more readily as I have no interest in the matter beyond a desire to remove erroneous impressions which exist in Parliament and elsewhere, and of which your correspondent's letter is proof.

FIELD OFFICER.

[As far as we are concerned this controversy must end. We quite agree with the field officer, not from personal experience, but from the evidence of the Service.—ED., A. & N. G.]

HORSES FOR THE FRONT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I would beg to draw attention to the following which I cut from the Morning Post of Monday. It is from the Post's Bloemfontein correspondent:—

"Mr. Wyndham's reply disconnecting the delay from lack of horses has caused some surprise. The necessity for a large and ever-increasing supply of remounts cannot be too urgently insisted on. We do want horses, and we shall want horses till the very last day of the campaign. The sacrifice of horseflesh in the past is nothing in comparison with the possibilities of the future. The area across which a cavalry screen must be thrown necessitates an immense strain, and the consequent gaps must be filled immediately they occur. The grass for another month will be worth next to nothing. Continuous feeding of the horses on nitrogenous matter is certain to cause laminitis and kindred disease arising from hot blood."

I can vouch for the actual truth of all these statements. But not only more horses are wanted. When I left, the poor veterinary officers were being worked to death. What made their position worse was that they had had a lot of young civilian practitioners sent out to train. Now, this is cruelly unfair to everybody, for the routine work of an army cannot be learnt in face of an enemy by men ignorant of the remotest details of the Service. The arrangements place everyone in such a false position that I trust the system of untrained men on field-service may meet with the condemnation it deserves.

THE FRENCH NAVAL STAFF.

WHEN M. de Lanessan accepted the Naval portfolio in Paris he determined to give greater importance to the operations of the chief of the staff—to create what some in this country might call a "brain" for the Navy by investing in that officer all the functions concerned in the preparation for war. The officer chosen for these important duties was Rear-Admiral Caillard, who was credited with equal judgment and competence. He was to take charge of matters concerning both the material and the personnel of the fleet, so far as they concerned mobilisation and preparation for war. In a country which does not possess an Admiralty Board, such a position as that of the chief of the staff, endowed with these high and important attributes, seems essential. There must be some individual or set of individuals charged with the direction of the Navy's effort and with the constitution of the means to achieve the end of its existence. The change introduced by M. de Lanessan was therefore welcomed in France as apparently giving something of finality to the working of the departments in the Rue Royale, and it may be that the larger shipbuilding programme which has been introduced, after having been discussed by the Superior Council of the Navy, is one of the results.

It has been known for some little time back that Rear-Admiral Caillard and Captain Le Dô, his sub-chief, were about to retire. A further step, not indeed of organisation, but giving added importance to the office, has been taken by appointing officers of higher rank to the two positions. The new chief and sub-chief of the staff are Vice-Admiral Bienaimé and Rear-Admiral Bayle, who will undoubtedly possess a greater degree of authority than their predecessors. Admiral Bienaimé is the youngest flag-officer of his rank, having been born in February, 1843. His career has been active and brilliant, and he has held several important offices. He navigated, in the Manche, in the Arctic regions, and accompanied an Austrian commission of scientific men who visited the island of Jan Mayen. Afterwards he had an administrative appointment as sub-chief of the staff at Toulon, and then was in command of the French Naval forces in the Indian Ocean. During the campaign in Madagascar the admiral gave proof of energy and organising capacity. Up to that time he had been a commodore, but was promoted to flag rank in 1895, and, on returning in the next year, Admiral de Cuverville took him as chief of the staff in the Mediterranean squadron. He was then nominated to the command of the Superior Naval School, but was immediately promoted to vice-admiral. His colleague, Rear-Admiral Bayle is fifty-seven years of age, and is also a distinguished officer who, during a long career, has held many posts of importance, both administrative and executive. It is understood that Vice-Admiral Bienaimé intends to concentrate all his efforts upon his chief functions, which by a decree of July 18, 1899, have been defined as "preparation for Naval war, and especially the commissioning and mobilisation of the fleet." It is announced in the Press that he will make himself an organiser, and observers have very often remarked that in France an organiser is above all things necessary. A colossal work, no doubt, lies before the admiral, and it will be extremely interesting to learn, if it should ever be possible to learn, what success attends his efforts. Unfortunately for the French Navy the instability of French institutions is such that we may think it highly probable that he will not be granted time before some change in Government or constitution compels him to retire.

Navv Notes.

Her Majesty when approaching Holyhead pier, on her return from Ireland last week, gave instructions that the following signal message should be made to Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, in command of the Channel Fleet, acting as escort to the yacht:—"The Queen wishes to express her thanks to her escort, of which she is justly proud, and the appearance of which she greatly admires. Her Majesty was much gratified by the manner in which the crews sang the National Anthem, and hopes you will have a pleasant cruise." The gallant flag officer in command immediately replied:—"Please convey to Her Majesty in the name of the Navy our thanks to Her Majesty for having graciously permitted us to escort her across." The Princesses Christian and Henry of Battenberg also signalled to Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson:—"The two Princesses send you greetings, and think the fleet looks magnificent." To which Sir Harry replied:—"In the name of the whole squadron I thank your Royal Highnesses very much."

The review of the Naval Brigade, held by the Queen at Windsor on Wednesday, was a fully earned and well deserved compliment to Captain Lambton and the seamen and marines with him. It may be that as fresh developments occur the part played by the Navy will be forgotten and, in any case, it will become ancient history; it is just as well, therefore, that opportunity should be taken, without loss of time, to recognise it in every possible way. Her Majesty, with that insight and thoughtfulness which marks all her dealings, gave to her welcome a shape than which the men could desire or wish for nothing better. From the captain down to the midshipmen, among the officers, and with every bluejacket and Marine, this visit to Windsor, to be inspected by their venerable Queen, and to listen to her revered words of welcome, must remain an incident the memory of which will be treasured all their lives. Captain Lambton's brief and modest reply was in every way admirable. What the Navy has done in South Africa is as nothing to what it is prepared to do at any time for her Majesty and the Empire. We are glad to notice that our countrymen in other parts of the world are taking opportunity to entertain Captain Scott the officers and men of the Terrible, for the part they have played in South Africa. In this connection we may quote the words used at Portsmouth by Captain Lambton in referring to Sir George White's determination to hold Ladysmith. "By doing so," he said, "Sir George saved Natal, and saving Natal he saved South Africa, while by saving South Africa he saved the British Empire." This is true, but it is only right and just to remember that it was the inventive genius and resourcefulness of Captain Percy Scott, and the promptitude and cheerful courage of Captain Lambton and the Powerfuls which made the salvation of Ladysmith possible.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton and his gallant brigade of Ladysmith fame, have a hard day's work before them on Monday next. They arrive at Victoria Station in the forenoon and form on the Horse Guards' parade for inspection by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. After being entertained in the Admiralty building, they parade and march through Northumberland Avenue, the Thames Embankment, and Queen Victoria Street, stopping at Lloyd's for refreshment, and from thence to London Bridge Station to return to Portsmouth. Given a fine day there will be an immense crowd along the route, but even if the weather is unpropitious there will be no lack of spectators. On the following Thursday the gallant captain receives the Freedom of the City of Durham as well as a presentation from the County Palatine, and on Saturday the 19th, he responds for the Navy at the annual dinner of the Newspaper Press Fund in the Whitehall Rooms. On Saturday last he had the honour of being received by the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House.

A very curious story comes home from Esquimaux about the circumstances attending the death of Lieutenant R. D. Scott, of the Pheasant. Although a verdict of "justifiable homicide" was returned at the inquest, it is asserted that the occurrence was at least in part due to the friction which has existed for some time between the Naval and Military branches of the Service at that port. In this connection it will be remembered that a short paragraph in the First Lord's memorandum chronicles the requiem of an experiment, from which much was hoped. We are told "the detachment of Royal Marine Artillery lent to the Dominion Government for submarine and defence work at Vancouver Island were finally withdrawn in September last, after six years' useful work at that station." Thus is recorded the first and possibly the last attempt at garrisoning our coal-ing stations with Marines. Those who had been interested in the experiment had for some time been aware that it was likely to fail, and therefore when the order for withdrawal was given but little notice was taken of the matter. The paragraph we have quoted above once more directed attention to the subject, and now it is said that the substitution of garrison artillerymen for Marines has set up a friction with most lamentable results. It is to be hoped that the report of the committee of investigation, which we have no doubt has already been at work, will be placed before the public with as little delay as possible.

By what we can only regard as the most fortunate coincidence the issue of the United Service Magazine for May contains an interesting and thoughtful article by Captain W. Baker Brown, R.E., on the subject of "Marines and Coaling Stations," apropos of the fiasco at Esquimaux. Captain Brown recalls the discussion and contention which arose in 1891, when the late Sir Drummond Jervois proposed what he called "Home Rule for the Navy," a scheme for the transfer of all our coast fortresses to Naval charge. It was Sir John Colomb who suggested as an alternative scheme that the Marines should garrison the coaling stations, and Lord George Hamilton, who promised that an experiment should be made at one of the smaller stations. It was in '93 that the detachment of Marines was sent to Esquimaux after a short period of training in submarine mining, electric lighting, and land service artillery. Captain Brown relates the seven years' experience thus obtained, so far as the actual facts can be ascertained without access to official documents. He points out that from the very first no attempt appears to have been made to make the Marine garrison interchangeable with the Marines afloat, although this was one of the advantages claimed for the scheme. The reason is no doubt to be found in the circumstance that not only for the engineer duties of submarine mining and electric lighting, but also for the artillery work it was necessary to give the officers and men selected for the garrison a considerable amount of special training. In fact, says Captain Brown, the artillery training had been so hurried that technical assistance had to be obtained from the Royal Artillery at Halifax and Nova Scotia before the guns could be mounted. Moreover, it was necessary to borrow engineer officers and men from the War Office to perform a number of services and special duties which could not be performed by the Marines. "This introduced another difficulty. The officer selected by the War Office to take charge of this technical work became in time the senior officer at the station and took command of the whole of the troops there, still further upsetting the original scheme. Such an arrangement naturally gave rise to friction." Whether the decision to withdraw the Marines from Esquimaux was actually caused by the difficulties which thus arose, the fact that they have been withdrawn, and their places taken by Royal Artillerymen and Royal Engineers, is the strongest possible evidence of the failure of the scheme, and will probably settle the question of employing Marines in such situations for this generation. Whatever may have been the reasons which induced Sir Drummond Jervois to put forward his proposals, there has never been any doubt as to the motive which inspired the alternative suggestion. It is only natural, therefore, to find that Captain Brown proposes another solution. He says, in concluding his article—

"Marine officers at present suffer from one very serious disability in that there is no adequate employment for them when they reach the higher ranks, the whole of the officers on their general's list being permanently unemployed, while their colonels and most of their field officers are kept at depôts with very limited responsibility. This defect might be remedied with decided gain to the Empire by placing all Marine officers of the rank of Lieutenant Colonel and upwards on the Army roster for employment. . . . Such an arrangement would not affect their employment afloat or their exclusive employment in the special senior appointments of their own corps. They would be in this respect on the same footing as officers of the Royal Artillery or Royal Engineers. With such an arrangement we might some day have a Marine general in command at Malta or Bermuda."

We cannot congratulate the Navy League upon its decidedly novel method of directing public attention to the defects of the Fleet. The intention was excellent, no doubt, but there is something decidedly undignified in employing the sandwich-man to advertise the alleged lame ducks of the Fleet. Besides this—which is more or less a matter of taste—was the League quite justified in quoting from one of Lord C. Beresford's speeches? To take an extract from the speech of a flag officer now on service abroad, and place it on a sandwich-board, appears to us distinctly improper and unfair. Any officer less secure of the public favour than Lord C. Beresford might easily be damaged professionally by such misuse of his speeches. For the rest, it is perfectly true that there are obsolete vessels on the official lists. That it is so deceives no foreign Power, and should not even mislead the man in the street. It is a matter of notoriety that the flagship of the First Reserve Squadron is armed with muzzle-loaders, and that many other ships similarly armed are yet flying the pennant. All this is very well known, and being so, gives students of Naval policy and cognate subjects a right to criticise the Navy, but we feel a prejudice against the sandwich-board when used for this purpose, which the Navy League will possibly scorn as old-fashioned.

In reference to the notice which has been taken of its posters, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Navy League explains that, being men of business, the members of the League expect goods contracted and paid for to be supplied. While admitting that the "rearmament" of the "death traps" is a matter for the Admiralty upon which it makes no pretension to pronounce, the League emphatically objects to the country being misled by official statements. The sixteen ships in question are either efficient or not, and the complaint of the League is that, although the worthlessness of these vessels has been denounced for years, no action has been taken. It is pointed out by the Chairman that Admiral Sir Henry Nicholson, recently in command at the Nore, speaking at the Queen's Hall on March 28, said of the ships in question that "sixteen battleships in the Navy were armed with obsolete guns, were composed of inflammable materials which would burn like a tar-barrel, and were no more entitled to be called line-of-battle ships than a Chinese junk." The letter concludes:—"Other means of striking ineffective ships off official returns having failed, we have considered it our duty to call further public attention to the facts."

It is stated at Portsmouth that some very interesting and practical experiments are to be carried out this year to test the extent of the inflammability of wood-work in warships. With this view, as the story goes, the coast defence ship Belleisle is to be fitted up as a target ship and attached to the Channel squadron. The practice will be superintended, it is said, by Rear-Admiral Fanshawe and by Captain May, the well-known gunnery expert. The details of the experiment are not, of course, made public, and it is therefore, impossible to state whether or no the Belleisle will be specially fitted with non-inflammable woodwork. Presumably, she will be so fitted, since the action off Santiago amply demonstrated the dangerous inflammability of the Spanish cruisers. It is several years now since a practical test of this sort has been carried out in our Navy, with the exception, of course, of the usual gunnery experiments at Portsmouth against a venerable vessel thinly plated with soft iron.

It has already been advocated in some quarters that promotion to the rank of lieutenant should be conferred upon at least one of the Naval warrant officers who have shared gallantly in the defence of Ladysmith. There are some precedents for this, and one would suppose that such a promotion would please the warrant officers in general, yet it is far from certain that it would actually please the majority. The warrant officers are disposed to consider that promotion for gallantry in the field, or in action afloat, is not a very satisfactory principle. Gallantry is not the sole requirement in a commissioned officer of the rank of lieutenant, and the Admiralty have experienced considerable embarrassment in finding suitable employment for the two officers specially promoted to lieutenant's rank after the bombardment of Alexandria. We were not aware, moreover, that any warrant officer in Captain Lambton's brigade has been officially recommended for commissioned rank. Certainly no recommendation of that kind has appeared in despatches, and we fail to see how any warrant officer can be advanced unless by the recommendation of his senior officer. To put the matter plainly, it is useless to advance these officers unless they are fully qualified to perform the usual duties of a lieutenant in a ship of war at sea.

It is particularly requested that intending contributors to the Navy stall at the forthcoming National Bazaar, to be held at the Empress Rooms, Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, and adjoining grounds on May 24, 25, and 26, in aid of the sufferers by the war, will send their gifts, whether money or articles for sale, as soon as possible to the honorary secretary of the Navy stall, the Hon. Mrs. Charlton, at the above address.

THE NAVAL BRIGADE AT WINDSOR.

The Naval Brigade of the Powerful left Portsmouth by special train on Wednesday morning for Windsor to be inspected by the Queen. The total force numbered 22 officers and 286 men. The officers with Capt. Lambton were:—Lieuts. A. W. Heneage, L. Halsey, and R. F. White; Engineers E. H. Ellis and C. C. Sheen; Surgs. C. M. Beadnell and J. G. Fowler; Gunner W. Sims; Midshipmen T. C. Armstrong, G. E. Lewin, R. C. Hamilton, A. Stokes, the Hon. I. L. A. Carnegie, H. T. Hayes, J. R. Middleton, C. R. Sharp, and E. G. Chichester. Major A. G. B. Urmston, R.M.L.I., who was in command of the Marines on the western frontier, and Lieut. H. A. H. Jones, R.M.L.I., who was wounded at Graspan, Lieut. Briscoe, late R.N., who was with the Brigade at Ladysmith, and Commander F. C. A. Ogilvy, who was promoted out of the Terrible, also formed part of the force.

The streets of Windsor were decorated in honour of the occasion, and crowds of people lined the roads. The special train was received by the Mayor, who welcomed Capt. Lambton, and then the men, blue-jackets and Marines, red and blue, detrained with their guns, and, headed by the band of the Grenadier Guards, marched to the Castle. They looked as healthy and stalwart a body of men as ever were seen. With them they brought a 12-pounder and a couple of Maxims. An onlooker says: "It was a lovely spectacle. In the background the towers of Windsor, with the Royal Standard streaming on the breeze and in the sun, below the steep acclivity of the street thickly lined on either side, and in the middle the sailors dragging their guns. The band plays 'They all love Jack,' and the public shout as if they did. All the way up the hill and along the High Street and up to the turning into the Long Walk the story is the same. It is one long and grand acclaim, one blaze of colour, one flutter of handkerchiefs and of flags."

The Queen inspected the Brigade in the Quadrangle of the Castle. Her Majesty was accompanied by Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Henry of Battenberg, Princess Louis of Battenberg, and Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein. The Duke of York and Prince Louis of Battenberg, Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, Mr. G. J. Goschen, Lord George Hamilton, and Sir George White were also present.

The Brigade received the Queen with a royal salute, after which Capt. the Hon. Hedworth Lambton had the honour of being presented. The guns being in position on the left, the Queen drove down the line from left to right and inspected the officers and men, after which the Brigade marched past in column, re-formed the line in quarter-column of double companies, gave three cheers for the Queen, advanced in review order close to Her Majesty's carriage, and gave a royal salute.

The officers of the Brigade were then presented to the Queen by Capt. Lambton, and at the conclusion of the presentation, her Majesty addressed the officers and men as follows:—"I wish you all heartily welcome on your return home, after the great trials you have so nobly borne, and I thank you warmly for the great services you have rendered to your Queen and the Empire." Capt. the Hon. H. Lambton said in reply that he did not consider that the Naval Brigade had done anything very wonderful at Ladysmith, and what they had done was nothing to what they are ready to do at any time for the Queen. The Queen's carriage was then driven to the end of the Quadrangle near St. George's Gate, where the Brigade marched past her Majesty in fours to the riding school, where dinner was provided for the men. The Queen afterwards visited the riding school during the time the men were dining, when Capt. Lambton called for three cheers for her Majesty, which were heartily given. The Brigade returned to Portsmouth soon after six the same evening.

Navv Personal.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales will attend the inspection of the Powerful's Naval Brigade by the Admiralty on Monday next, and afterwards honour the First Lord with his presence at the luncheon to the officers of that cruiser.

Captain H.R.H. the Duke of York, Admiral Sir Leopold M'Cintock, F.R.S., and Sir James Erskine, and Rear Admirals A. W. Moore, Junior Naval Lord, and Charles Lucas, V.C., were the Naval representatives at the banquet of the British Empire League to commemorate the services rendered by the colonial forces in South Africa, as well as welcoming the Australian delegates.

Were Admiral of the Fleet Sir Geoffrey Phipps-Hornby with us, he would admit that it was the proudest moment of life to know that his son, Major E. J. Phipps-Hornby, R.H.A., has been recommended for the Victoria Cross. His brother Admiral of the Fleet, the late Sir George Sartorius, had the great and unprecedented privilege of presenting his two sons to his Sovereign, who had gained this most coveted distinction for services in Ashanti and Afghanistan.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir John E. Commerell, V.C., has returned to duty as Groom in Waiting to the Queen.

Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney obtains the Greenwich Hospital Pension vacant by the death of Admiral T. H. Mason. This is a tardy recognition of a valuable officer's numerous services. He was Midshipman in the Albion at the Battle of Navarino, 1827. In 1836 he commenced his Arctic experiences with Captain Sir James Ross, and subsequently distinguished himself in making exceptionally long journeys over the ice while in command of the Assistance. Since attaining flag rank his devotion to science gained him the much-coveted distinction of F.R.S. He was knighted in 1877.

Admiral Sir William Kennedy ought to be well satisfied with the reception of his interesting and briny memoirs at a time when military books and books on South Africa are practically the only ones to attract the public. His memoirs are full of plums, many of which will be entirely fresh even to Naval men.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, attended at Holyhead station on the Queen's arrival on Friday in last week, and had the honour of being presented to Her Majesty.

Admiral T. H. M. Mason, who died at Ipswich on February 12 last, left estate valued at £11,144. Several local charities were recognised by the deceased flag-officer in his will.

Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson arrived in London from Denmark on Tuesday last in attendance on H.R.H. the Princess of Wales.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, commanding the Channel Squadron, left Milford on Wednesday for Bangor, Lamlash, Greenock, and Berehaven. The squadron is to arrive at Spithead on May 15, probably in connection with some function connected with the celebration of Her Majesty's birthday.

Rear-Admiral Sir Baldwin Walker, Bart., recently promoted to flag rank while in command of the Hannibal, was the guest of Captain Arthur Barrow, of the Prince George, at dinner last week, when all the captains of the Channel Squadron were invited to meet him. During dinner their gallant and genial vice-admiral, Sir Harry Rawson, signalled to the Prince George from his flagship, "We have just drank success to our junior rear-admiral," a compliment Sir Baldwin gratefully acknowledged.

Captain A. C. Corry paid off the Hood on Saturday last at Chatham. The vessel will be again prepared for foreign service.

Captain G. Neville, of the Australia, Captain R. W. White, of the Galatea, and Captain Charles Wyndham, of the Royal yacht Osborne, had the honour of being presented to the Queen on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, at Holyhead, on Friday in last week.

Captain T. D. Williams obtains the Greenwich Hospital pension vacant by the death of Captain William Mould.

Captain H. M. O. Festing has been given a Naval pension in the place of the late Captain P. A. Scott.

Captains A. F. M. Meyer and Howard Kerr are awarded the additional Naval pensions sanctioned by Order in Council of January last for retired commanders.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, arrived at Singapore on Friday in last week, and was, with those serving under him, accorded a most enthusiastic reception. On Sunday he and the officers were entertained at luncheon, and the following day the ship's company were generously feasted, and afterwards attended an amateur theatrical performance specially arranged for their amusement. The cruiser was to leave for Hong Kong on Thursday, where preparations are also under way to give the gallant Brigade a hearty reception.

Captain Anson Schomberg, of the Victorious, entered the Suez Canal at the southern entrance on Sunday last, and arrived at Port Said the following day. The minds of irresponsible M.P.'s will not be troubled by any mishap to this battleship on the second occasion of her transit through the Egyptian waterway.

Captain F. O. Pike, of the Minerva, who conveyed the Polyphemus to Devonport, leaves again on Monday next for Gibraltar with the torpedo-boat destroyers Orwell, Skate, Sunfish, and Hardy in company, to reinforce the Mediterranean fleet.

Captain G. A. Giffard, of the Charybdis, left Devonport on Wednesday last for the North American station to resume his duties as commodore on the Newfoundland Fishery coast.

Captain C. J. Graves-Sawle, who recently returned from the Crescent on the North American station, obtains almost immediate re-employment by his appointment to the Bonaventure, which vessel has another year to run before returning home, or being re-commissioned abroad.

Captain Samuel Johnson's retirement is the only compulsory removal from the active list of that rank until April next year, when Captain H. S. Gibson attains the age of fifty-five. Commodore E. H. Meggs Davis follows in August, and Captain R. F. Henderson in November, 1901, but that is looking some way ahead. Exceptional vacancies may, however, occur in the flag list before then, or the officers thereon who attained flag rank prior to 1895 and have not yet been employed might choose to take advantage of the seven years' non-service option of the Order in Council of the 3rd ult.

Commander E. S. Poë returned to Gibraltar on Saturday last from Las Palmas in the St. George, accompanied by the Cambrian.

Commander E. L. Lang, of the Polyphemus, arrived at Devonport on Sunday last, and has since proceeded to Chatham to pay off that vessel and commission the Pyramus.

Commander (retired) E. S. Clapp, Harbour Master at Holyhead, had the honour of being presented to the Queen after the Royal arrival on Friday in last week, and was the recipient of a note-book bearing the Royal monogram in silver in recognition of his services at the departure from and the arrival at that port of her Majesty.

Lieutenant the Hon. L. J. O. Lambart, Flag-Lieutenant to the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, attended the funeral of the late Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax on Wednesday in last week, on whose staff he served during the period of the deceased flag officer's command at the western port.

Sub-Lieutenants H. E. F. Aylmer, of the Indefatigable, and the Hon. Arthur Stopford, borne in the Monarch, have been promoted, after eighteen months' service, to the rank of lieutenant in consideration of the positions they attained in their examinations at the Royal Naval College.

Fleet-Paymaster F. H. M. Whitfield cannot complain of being over-indulged with home service during a career of thirty years as commissioned service, and at the age of fifty-one. He was upwards of sixteen years an assistant-paymaster, and spent most of that period abroad. Since promotion to paymaster, 1886, he has not been offered a home appointment, and when he applied for one in 1896, after three years' Channel service, was sent to China. He returned from Hong Kong in the early part of last year, and since then has been on half-pay in consequence of ill-health. His case compares unfavourably with more fortunate juniors of the accountant branch.

Fleet-Paymaster J. St. J. Wagstaffe has been granted the Greenwich Hospital Pension, vacant by the death of Paymaster-in-Chief G. F. Norman. Mr. Wagstaffe is one of the few officers who have been elevated to the quarter-deck from the rank and file of the Navy. After attaining the rank of Assistant-Paymaster in 1856, his ability procured him an appointment in the secretarial branch, and five years afterwards (1861) he was promoted Paymaster for his services at the Peiho Forts (1859) under Vice-Admiral Sir James Hope. Failing health necessitated retirement from the active list in 1875, and he subsequently held the post of secretary to the Royal Naval Benevolent Society until 1898, when he was obliged to resign on account of failing eyesight, receiving a substantial recognition of his ability from the members of that corporation.

Assistant-Paymaster Sidney B. Hinshelwood, secretary to the Commodore at Jamaica, attains the rank of Paymaster without having been troubled with much service in a ship at sea. For several years past he has alternated between stationary vessels abroad and home appointments. Originally a midshipman, he was transferred to the Accountant Department in consequence of losing his left hand, but that is no reason why he should be exempted from taking his turn in a sea-going ship. If the same method of appointing him is pursued in his new rank, his actual service career will be exceptionally fortunate, though somewhat unfair for his brother officers.

Lieut.-Colonel J. B. Leafe, R.M.A., on special service in South Africa, proceeds to St. Helena.

Major A. G. B. Urmston, R.M.L.I., and Surgeon C. Marsh-Beadnell, of the Powerful, arrived by the Pindari at Southampton on Thursday in last week, but were too late to be present at the banquet given by the Commander-in-Chief and the officers of the Portsmouth command to their brother officers of that cruiser. Both officers were at the front in South Africa. Major Urmston goes to the depot as instructor of musketry. Surgeon Marsh-Beadnell will undoubtedly receive recognition for his services, especially those at the action of the Modder River, where he aided the Army Medical Staff while subject to heavy fire from the enemy, an account of which we have previously referred to.

Major G. D'A. Anderson, R.M.L.I., Instructor of Gunnery at Portsmouth, goes on half-pay for a year in consequence of ill-health. His place on the Divisional Headquarters Staff will be filled by Captain G. C. Eveleigh. Captain G. A. Cox becomes Major, and Lieutenant R. Cator Captain, by the temporary withdrawal of Major Anderson from actual service.

Major R. W. Heathcote, R.M.L.I. (retired) Recruiting Staff Officer at Southampton since May 1, 1895, has been fortunate enough to secure an extension of his appointment for three years.

Lieutenant W. P. McLaughlin, R.M.L.I., relieves Lieutenant B. R. O. Sullivan, in the Majestic; and Lieutenant P. H. Colley, R.M.L.I., relieves Captain H. M. C. W. Hamilton, and Lieutenant A. S. Tetler, R.M.L.I., relieves Lieutenant C. L. Hall, in the Hannibal, on the 10th inst., after two years' service afloat in each case.

The German armoured cruiser Prinz Heinrich, which has been launched at Kiel, was built under the designation of "A," and is the sister of another cruiser, "B," which is also in hand. They represent a type new to the German Navy. There seems to be no intention to continue building ships of the Hertha class (5,650 tons), and it may be assumed that the Prinz Heinrich class, which is armoured, while the other is only protected, takes its place. The armoured cruiser Fürst Bismarck displaces 10,650 tons, but the new class is only of 8,368 tons, with a length of 396ft. and 64ft. 9in. beam. There are two 9.4in. guns instead of four, and ten of 5.9 instead of twelve. But, on the other hand, the smaller cruisers are to steam at 20.5 knots as compared with 19. The belt is of 4in. nickel steel, and runs the whole length of the ship, besides giving protection to the battery, while the armoured deck has a thickness of nearly 3in. The machinery consists of three vertical triple-expansion engines, supplied by fourteen Dürr boilers, developing 15,000 horse-power, and the bunker capacity will be 950 tons. In addition to the guns which have been indicated the Prinz Heinrich will carry ten 3.4in. quick-firers protected by shields, ten 1.4in. and four machine guns, and will have four torpedo tubes, of which two will be submerged.

A Yellow Book has been laid upon the table of the French Chamber in relation to the proceedings of the Peace Conference at the Hague, and although the matter is one now of comparatively ancient history, it may be interesting, in view of the questions raised concerning explosives in South Africa, if we note some points from the volume. In the first place, in the Naval Commission, the delegates asked Captain Scheine, the Russian delegate, to formulate definitely the views of Count Muravieff in regard to the interdiction of new arms and explosives. He asked them to declare that no breechloader of more than 17in. calibre, and no quick-firer of more than 9in., should be used, and, inasmuch as the general tendency is now to a reduction of calibre, and no guns of more than 12in. are being introduced into warships, his demand may be described as academic. Moreover, no projectiles, other than those in use, were to be employed, and the force of recoil was not to be used to recharge the guns. The delegates, although willing to submit these proposals to their Governments, did not hold out the hope that they would be acceptable. Admiral Péphau attempted to conciliate by certain proposals which did not, indeed, greatly modify those of Captain Scheine. He suggested 3,000 feet as the maximum initial velocity to be given, and 12in. as the extreme thickness of armour to be used in warships. The discussion upon these points came to nothing, and in regard to new explosives, the sub-commission only looked with disfavour upon projectiles made with the sole object of discharging asphyxiating or poisonous gas. But here, again, the discussion came to nothing, and the same was the case in regard to submarine boats, plungers, and the ram. Practically the only useful work done was in regard to extending the provisions of the Convention of Geneva to Naval War.

The expansion of the American Navy still goes on, and the Naval Appropriation Bill which was reported to the House of Representatives from the Naval Committee on April 5, involving an expenditure of 61,219,916 dols., proposes the largest expenditure ever reported in the House. It is recommended that two battleships of 13,500 tons, three armoured cruisers of 13,000 tons and three protected cruisers of 8,000 tons each shall be laid down. A great deal of delay has arisen through inability to procure satisfactory armour, and, though a minority of the committee is against excessive payments, the majority declare that it will be unpatriotic and impolitic to recommend any other than the best armour, which they believe to be that made upon the Krupp system.

The Novoe Vremya publishes a telegram which states that on April 6 Vice-Admiral Hildebrandt, commanding the Russian Pacific Squadron, visited the Emperor of Korea, who expressed his pleasure at the arrival of the Russian squadron at Chemulpo and the hope that it would prolong its stay there. By the wish of the Emperor the band of the Navarin, battleship, performed in the Palace, after which the Court singers danced and sang in honour of the Russian admiral. On April 8 the admiral and his staff, accompanied by the members of the Russian Mission, left Chemulpo. The Japanese have repeated in a more energetic manner their request for the right to establish communication by wireless telegraphy on the Korean coasts and islands.

The Ruelle foundry, in the Charente, is hard at work, says the Patrie, on the new 164.7mm. naval gun, of which a hundred will be ready before the end of the year. The gun weighs 9,000 kilos, and its projectile 52 kilos. The Patrie gives the following particulars:—Initial velocity, 900 mètres; speed of fire, 5 per minute; penetrating power, point-blank, 32 centimètres of Harveyised steel; at 3,000 mètres, 20 centimètres.

Further particulars have been received through Reuter's Agency with respect to the loss of a Turkish torpedo-boat recently. The vessel, which bore the name of Siamjavelot, was escorting a steamer carrying the Vali of Tripoli, when an explosion occurred and she sank a few hundred yards from the harbour of Beirut. Her crew and officers all perished, and several notables and officials who were on board were also killed or injured. Altogether twenty-seven persons lost their lives and ten were injured. The Siamjavelot was built in Germany.

The Kronstadtski Vestnik publishes the following list of Russian warships on foreign stations: Port Arthur.—Navarin, Sissoi Veliky, battleships; Rossia, Rurik, Dmitri Donskoi, Vladimir Monomach, Rasboynik, cruisers; Otwajni, Sivoutch, gunboats; Vsadnik, Gaidamak, t.g.b.'s. Nagasaki.—Petropavlovsk, battleship; Bobr, Korieta, Gremiashtchi, gunboats. Shanghai.—Zabiaka, cruiser. Yokohama.—Admiral Kornilov, cruiser. Mosanpo.—Mandjour, gunboat. On the way to the Far East.—Admiral Nachimov, cruiser, at Spezzia; Giliak, gunboat, at Colombo. The Piræus.—T.b.'s Nos. 119 and 120. Suda.—Zaporetz, gunboat. Villafranca.—Imperator Alexander II., battleship; Abrek, gunboat. Toulon.—Khraby, gunboat. Cherbourg.—Herzog Edinburgski, Pamyat Azova, cruisers. Copenhagen.—Djidjit, cruiser. The Pamyat Azova and Djidjit are homeward bound.

The Italia Militare e Marina states that the new type of ship for the Italian Navy, called the Bettolo type, after the Italian Minister of Marine, will be 442ft. in length, 62½ft. in beam, and have a displacement of 8,500 tons. Her speed will be 20 knots. She will be protected by an armour belt, and will carry twelve 8in. and eight 3in. guns. Two ships of this type will be put in hand as soon as the plans have been passed by the Superior Council.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—As doubts have been expressed concerning the accuracy of my estimate of the additional shipping that will call in at Cape Town if the Suez Canal traffic is diverted to the Cape trade route, it may be useful to give the method by which the estimate of 12,000,000 tons per annum was arrived at. For this purpose let us use the figures for the year 1898, and, to avoid confusion, make the calculation in round numbers.

In 1898 there passed through the Suez Canal 9,240,000 tons (net) of shipping, of which about 200,000 tons was owned by various Governments. Of this total, it was stated at the annual meeting of the Suez Canal Company, in Paris, that 4,690,000 tons (presumably metric tons) belonged to the Indian trade. This is roughly equivalent to 4,600,000 net tons. Now, let us disregard all the disadvantages which belong to the Cape route and to long sea voyages, which must inevitably make for delays, and assume that the facilities of each route are the same. The question arises, if the Indian trade at 10 knots takes 51 days to Bombay by the Cape, and only 28½ days by the canal, how much shipping will be required to carry on the same trade via the Cape?

Allowing for a few days in port at the end of each voyage, we find that each ship can make eleven trips during the year via the canal and only six trips by the ocean route. It follows, therefore, that to cope with the same trade nearly 8,450,000 tons of shipping is required instead of the original 4,600,000 tons. To this we have to add the tonnage required for the trade in other directions which in 1898 was carried on through the Suez Canal by 4,640,000 tons of shipping. The same consideration applies, viz. that a larger proportion of shipping is required on account of the longer voyages. This makes a total considerably over my estimate of 12,000,000 tons, but we have to remember that 1898 was a very prosperous year. My estimate is a conservative one, suited to an average of years. The consideration of speeds other than ten knots does not affect my argument, except in so far as high speeds are liable to greater reductions on long voyages than an average "tramp" speed of ten knots. This consideration can only militate against the Cape route, so it is hardly likely to be advanced by my critics.

SEAMEN'S MISSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—Before the special interest of the war is exhausted, may we draw the attention of your readers to a subject which has a great claim on our sympathies, and which has hitherto passed unrecognised? Owing to the number of merchant vessels requisitioned as troopships and transports for South Africa, the Missions to Seamen has largely increased its efforts at the South African ports, to visit all incoming and outgoing ships—including the hospital ships—and to speak a word of comfort and cheer, not only to the seamen, but to the soldiers as well.

Six chaplains and lay helpers are at work on these stations, and the increased expenditure entailed on the society amounts to £1,500 a year. We wish, through the help of your columns, to let it be known that to meet this extra expense to the society, a conversation is being organised by the ladies of the London Branch of the Mission to Seamen, which will take place at the Galleries of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, Piccadilly, on May 14, 9 p.m. Full particulars will be advertised in due course, and tickets, 7s. 6d., or three for £1 la. can be obtained from the Hon. Secs., 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, and from Messrs. Ashton, Box Office, Bond Street, and branches. We earnestly commend to the notice of all this unlooked-for opportunity of enlarging their sphere of usefulness.

WHAT IS TROPON?

TROPON is a natural pure albumen, prepared after the method of Professor Finkler, M.D., of the University of Bonn.

TROPON is the ESSENCE OF LIFE. It almost immediately relieves prostration and REVITALIZES THE ENTIRE SYSTEM.

TROPON is the only real food for the Healthy and Invalids, for Consumptives, and all suffering from Wasting Diseases, for those afflicted with Gout, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Albuminuria, &c.

TROPON is immediately absorbed and perfectly digested and transformed into blood and muscles. It is absolutely tasteless and odourless. It can be taken in its original form or as Tropon Biscuits, Tropon Rusks, or Tropon Chocolate.

TROPON is tolerated by even the weakest system.

TROPON is used in thousands of hospitals in Great Britain and abroad, and is prescribed by many thousands of doctors.

"THE TIMES," in its issue of September 5, says, under "Naval and Military Intelligence," referring to a report published in Kölnische Zeitung, with regard to an experiment made in the German Army with a new food for soldiers called "Tropon":—

"Twenty-five non-commissioned officers and men volunteered for the experiment, and were placed under the command of a lieutenant. Each man received three days' rations of Tropon rusks, Tropon chocolate, Tropon bean and pea soup. During three days the men were to march, in full marching order, thirty kilometres each day, and to sleep at night in the open air.

"A Tropon ration for three days weighs 1,200 grammes, whereas the ordinary ration of solid food of the German soldier weighs 1,950 grammes. The Tropon ration is also cheaper in proportion to the amount of nourishment it contains. The men found the Tropon food easy of digestion, and it kept them in good condition."

Sold by all leading Chemists and Stores.

"Food and Cookery"

in an interesting article in its April issue, after describing Harvey's Sauce, and its original manufacture by Mrs. Elizabeth Lazenby, says: "Through succeeding generations her lineal successors have continued the business on the same lines as those originally laid out, and from the original recipe, so that

The Best Field Glass for South Africa.

LIGHT WEIGHT
and HIGH POWER
ARE THE IMPORTANT ITEMS IN SELECTING
A FIELD GLASS FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

AITCHISON'S PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS

ONLY WEIGHS 5 OUNCES, ONLY 1 INCH THICK CLOSED.

The Army and Navy Gazette, Feb. 24th, 1900, says:—"The question of bulk as well as weight should be well considered when selecting a glass for service. Many of the glasses which are now being taken out to South Africa will never be used at all, owing to the nuisance of having a big leather case bumping about on the shoulders. The Patent Pocket Field Glass, however, which Messrs. Aitchison, the opticians, have made, will prove one of the most useful accessories which a scout can possess, as it can be carried readily in the pocket, can be brought into use very quickly owing to the system of rapid focus used, and is at the same time more powerful than many glasses three times its size."

As supplied to the Imperial Yeomanry, Lord Loth's Contingent, Honourable Artillery Company. Several thousands are now in use in South Africa.

The Daily Telegraph Cup and Dewar Shield contest takes place to-day at Bisley. In consequence of six battalions of the Guards being on war service, only the 1st Grenadiers and 3rd Coldstreamers have entered teams for the Daily Telegraph Cup, the new 3rd Scots Guards, the only other Guards battalion at home, not having been formed sufficiently long to provide a team of sixteen. With a team from the Hon. Artillery Company and twenty-four from infantry Volunteer corps in the district, there are in all twenty-seven teams entered for the contest. For the Dewar Trophy, in which teams of eight march about 7½ miles to Pirbright before firing, all three of the Guards' home battalions have entered, twenty-seven other teams being entered by the Hon. Artillery Company, Militia, and Volunteer corps of the district.

THE ADVANCE FROM BLOEMFONTEIN.

AFTER a prolonged but unavoidable halt of seven weeks, Lord Roberts's army resumed its northward march towards Pretoria on Thursday, the 3rd inst. The day was signalled by the occupation of Brandfort, thirty-six miles north of Bloemfontein, and fourteen miles from Karee-Siding, the most advanced post of the British for some weeks previously. This success, gained with but trifling loss, was the result of a brilliant series of operations, commencing on the 23rd ult. with the capture of Sanna's Post by General Ian Hamilton, and including the actions of the succeeding days, by means of which a British force had been thrust, at Houtnek and Jacobsrust, between the strategical positions held by the enemy on Thaba N'chu Mountain and at Brandfort, forty miles apart. While General Hamilton's force rested at Jacobsrust, the 7th and 11th Divisions, commanded respectively by Generals Tucker and Pole-Carew, with the 1st Brigade of Mounted Infantry under General Hutton, advanced northwards from Karee-Siding so disposed that the mounted infantry covered the left of the attack, the 7th Division the right, and the 11th Division marched directly on Brandfort. The enemy appear to have been taken by surprise, and after a sharp artillery duel at short range, beat a hasty retreat to the line of the Vet River eighteen miles to the north. The capture of Brandfort was followed automatically by the retirement northwards of a great part of the Boer force in position on Thaba N'chu Mountain, a smaller portion moving towards Thaba Pachoa in the south-east, apparently to face General Brabant who was seeking to approach Thaba N'chu, and join hands with General Rundle, still watching the Boer position, which was not yet entirely vacated. Lieut.-General French parted company from Sir Leslie Rundle on the 3rd inst., moving towards the north. On the 4th Lord Roberts's headquarters were at Brandfort. General Hutton's Mounted Infantry and Colonials were then well to the front approaching the Vet River, which crosses the railway twenty miles north of Brandfort. Further to the east Ian Hamilton moved his mounted force towards Winburg, and by the prompt and bold action of his cavalry, prevented the junction of the two wings of the enemy opposing the British columns.

On Saturday, a day of marked progress, Lord Roberts marched with General Pole-Carew's Division twenty miles to the Vet. General Wavell's Brigade of the 7th Division followed in support, and General Maxwell's Brigade of the same division kept two miles to the right. A three hours' artillery duel ensued, the passage of the river being hotly disputed; but shortly before dusk the mounted infantry and Colonial Horse, turning the Boer right, passed over in a very dashing manner lower down the stream, in face of a heavy fire. In this action, besides the field artillery and naval 12pr. and 4.7in. guns, Lord Roberts employed for the first time with that force two 5in. siege guns with excellent effect. The same evening General Ian Hamilton occupied Winburg after crossing the Kleine Vet, thirteen miles further to the east. General MacDonald's Highland Brigade of the 9th Division, which has apparently replaced Smith-Dorrien's Brigade of the same division with Hamilton, took part in this action, the Black Watch clearing a kopje on the British right with distinguished gallantry. At dawn on Sunday Lord Roberts, ascertaining that the enemy had fled during the night, passed his column over the Vet, and encamped by nine o'clock at Smaldeel Junction, where the branch line to Winburg leaves the main line. The enemy, under the command, it is supposed, of Lucas Meyer, were then in full retreat towards the Zand River twenty-three miles further north, having abandoned a Maxim gun, and the large stores that had been accumulated at Smaldeel which fell to the victors. The British dismounted troops then, holding securely the advance line from Smaldeel to Winburg, about eighteen miles long, rested, awaiting the arrival of supplies and reinforcements. General Pole-Carew's Division had marched nearly fifty miles in four days. In Saturday's action, at the passage of the Vet, a party of Australian Horse greatly distinguished themselves. They crept stealthily to the rear of a small kopje south of the river held by the enemy, and, fixing bayonets, carried it with a rush. The British loss in the action was comparatively small. Lord Roberts, by his bold strategy and the skilful disposition of his forces, had at every point met the enemy in superior numbers, and by threatening both their flanks with his mobile troops, while the infantry held them in front, had compelled them to retreat with precipitation.

On Monday the mounted troops of both columns, which were kept in touch with each other, reconnoitred to the Zand River, and found the enemy in considerable force. General Hutton camped that night at Welgelegen Station, sixteen miles north of Smaldeel. Meanwhile the repair of the railway, and its temporary deviation over the Vet where the bridge had been destroyed, were being rapidly carried out by the Royal Engineers. General French, of whom nothing had been heard for some days, joined Lord Roberts on Tuesday with his cavalry and horse artillery, a welcome addition to the indispensable mobile troops of the Commander-in-Chief, preparatory to a further advance against the enemy, located on Monday in force at Virginia Siding, where the railway crosses the Zand. The enemy's position was strongly entrenched, but it was capable of being turned. The halt on the Smaldeel-Winburg line was utilized to receive the submission of Burghers who, tired of the war, "are giving up their Mausers and horses in large numbers." The rest, however, was of short duration, as Lord Robertson Wednesday reported that Pole-Carew's and Tucker's Divisions, Ian Hamilton's column, the heavy naval and garrison artillery guns, and four brigades of cavalry marched to Welgelegen that day apparently unopposed, and found the enemy holding the opposite bank of the Zand River. In a further brief telegram, despatched on Thursday morning from headquarters, he announced that he had crossed the Zand, and was gradually pushing back the enemy, who still held a strong position. A third telegram, sent off three hours later, brought the satisfactory news that the enemy were in full retreat from a position covering twenty miles, with our cavalry and horse artillery following in pursuit on three different roads. The British Army was then ninety miles north of Bloemfontein, Lord Roberts's new base. Thirty miles further on lay Kroonstad, the recent temporary seat of the Orange State Government, but now discarded for Heilbron. Pretoria, the grand objective of the war, was at that time distant about one hundred and eighty miles.

Simultaneously with the forward movement of the two central columns, General Hunter on the extreme west of the strategical front crossed the Vaal without opposition on the 4th inst. at Wind-sorton, midway between Kimberley and Warren-ton. His force consists of General Barton's Brigade with half of General Hart's, and a body of Imperial Yeomanry. His mission may be primarily to invade the Transvaal and move along the north bank of the Vaal, but his objective is believed to be Mafeking, whence news dated the 29th ult., and cheerful as ever, has been received. Colonel Baden-Powell on the 27th was able to assure Lord Roberts, after 200 days of investment, of the continued devotion and resolution of the garrison. On Saturday

General Hunter was heavily engaged with a strong Boer force at Rooibdam, which place was taken after seven hours' fighting, the enemy retiring towards the north followed by the Yeomanry. During the action General Paget, by a vigorous demonstration at Warrenton against the Boer left at Fourteen Streams, kept the enemy in position there well engaged. General Hunter's success had exposed the Boer right north of the Vaal, and on Monday their position at Fourteen Streams was hurriedly evacuated after an attack by General Paget, whose concentrated and powerful artillery fire contributed in no small degree to the success of the day. The enemy retreated in a northerly direction either towards Christiana, in the Transvaal, or Phokwane on the railway.

For some time Lord Methuen, at Boshof, has held a post of considerable importance, forming the chief, if not the sole connecting link between the main army at Bloemfontein and the western border. Conforming with the general move he, on the 3rd and 4th inst., reconnoitred in force to the north-east in the direction of Swartkopjesfontein, and came in touch with a fairly large force of Boers trekking northwards towards Hoopstad. A general movement of the enemy towards the line of the Vaal and Kroonstad is now taking place. General Brabant, moving up from Wepener, joined hands with General Rundle at Thaba N'chu on Monday to guard Lord Roberts's right rear. The enemy had then entirely disappeared from Thaba N'chu Mountain, having vacated their impregnable position there, but they are said to be now entrenched at Mequatling's Nek with their headquarters at Clocolan. On Tuesday Ladybrand was reported to have been deserted by the Boers, who had heard with consternation of the occupation of Winburg, and, as they believed, of Senekal also, cutting off their retreat to Kroonstad. They, as well as their numerous herds of cattle now blocking up the eastern roads, may yet be destined to fall a prey to some part of the British forces. With the occupation of Ladybrand the security of the strategical line from Bloemfontein to Basutoland will be assured.

General Hart, of whose movements we have heard but little since the relief of Wepener, occupied Smithfield on the 2nd inst., where he captured part of a small commando still in arms in the place, the remainder dispersing. Half of his brigade has since been transferred to the Western border, and has joined General Hunter. The 3rd Division under General Chermiside is believed still to garrison De Wet's Dorp, and to have sent a detachment to hold Jammersburg Drift, by Wepener, the scene of Colonel Dalgety's valiant defence. No recent information of the whereabouts of General Smith-Dorrien's Brigade, or of General Kelly-Kenny's (6th) Division has come to hand. It is possible that a movement further to the east is in progress in which they, or a portion of their troops, may be taking part, to cut off the Boers endeavouring to extricate themselves from the Ladybrand district. A recent message from Bulawayo relative to the movements of Sir Frederick Carrington's expeditionary force, stated that a camp was in preparation there for its reception. There are indications that the long period of inaction of the Natal Army Corps is drawing to a close. Sir Redvers Buller has recently reconnoitred towards Van Reenen's Pass, which is traversed by the branch line connecting Ladysmith with Harrismith in the Orange State. We may expect to hear soon of important operations in this quarter with the object of opening up communications between the central and eastern forces.

Army Notes.

According to a telegram from Reuter's agent at Wei-Hai-Wei, a determined attack was made on the camp of the Boundary Commission at Liu-Kung-tau on Saturday last, Major Penrose, R.E., and four men of the Chinese Regiment, being wounded. The attacking party were repulsed with a loss of thirty killed. The attack was due, it is said, to Chinese officials working on the credulity of the natives, who have learnt what is hoped will be a useful lesson. It is satisfactory to know that the men of the Chinese Regiment behaved splendidly, and, under their British officers, proved themselves to be brave and good soldiers. It is a fact upon which Lieut.-Colonel Bower and his officers are to be congratulated, and it confirms the statement of a correspondent who wrote to us recently in a private letter: "These simple-minded Chinamen are fast developing into capital soldiers. It is quite a pleasure to have to train them, they seem so sensible of kindness, and are so cheerful and anxious to carry out instructions. If in a tight corner, they would, I feel certain, stand loyally by their officers, for they seem thoroughly happy and contented, and anxious to show themselves grateful for the thoughtful and almost fatherly care of their good commanding officer, who knows well how to win the confidence and respect of those under him." The outbreak is unpleasantly suggestive. That a British Boundary Commission should meet with such determined opposition is not very promising for the peaceful solution of the Chinese puzzle in other regions. It appears that the native officials stir up the fanatical hatred of the populace, and this vents itself in the wild attacks on the "white devils" of whatever nationality. On the Russian frontier such disorderly conduct is promptly nipped in the bud. That the new native regiment behaved splendidly goes without saying. No one who knows the Chinese intimately ever doubts their soldierly qualities. That they ran away in nearly every engagement during the war with Japan proves nothing, for they were badly led, badly disciplined, and badly fed. It is difficult to understand, by the by, why journalists persist in taking for granted that the Chinese Regiment at Wei-hai-Wei is the first which has been raised in the Queen's service. In the Chinese War of 1857 a corps was organised by Captain Temple and Mr. Paver, which showed remarkable pluck and coolness in the capture of Canton. In 1858 it was strengthened by the desire of Sir Hope Grant, and in 1860 played a gallant part in carrying the Taku Forts. It was in this war that Lord Wolseley formed his high opinion of the Chinese as soldiers.

The trouble in Ashanti is not yet at an end. For several weeks now the Governor and the few Europeans in Kumasi have been in a dangerous position. No doubt had public attention not been turned towards South Africa, we should have heard a good deal more about Ashanti. Happily reinforcements have been sent from Accra, and some bluejackets landed, which ought to put a different appearance on the rising. It is, however, unfortunate that Sir Frederick Hodgson has been forced to retire from the rebel's stockade, which, like the Maori pah, is a difficult fortress to storm. In spite of it all, there are signs that the coolness and pluck of our men will come out on top. As long as we demand that a handful of Englishmen shall rule a teeming population of savages, only just relieved from the tyranny of a cruel despot, we shall have such incidents in our Imperial history as the Ashanti and Uganda risings. Not that there is the slightest chance of a change of policy on our part in this respect, because in nine cases out of ten the handful of Englishmen triumphantly vindicate the supremacy of civilisation over barbarism. In the present instance the command of the relieving force is placed in very competent hands. Few officers of his rank have had more varied experience than Colonel Willcocks, and his popularity among the native troops in Nigeria is such, we are told, that his men "would all lay down their lives for him." A relief column led by an officer of Colonel Willcocks' character and ability ought soon to put a different complexion on matters once it takes the field.

The latest attack on Lord Methuen is not creditable. When Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil was killed in action near Kimberley, Lord Methuen, like a good soldier and high-minded gentleman, took steps to raise a monument over his grave. The act was approved by every soldier, and acknowledged in graceful terms by the French press. A few irresponsible politicians at St. Stephen's have been demanding explanations. Mr. Wyndham's answer, that "one brave man has a right to put up a monument to the memory of another," has apparently not been deemed satisfactory. All we can say is that we are sorry for the politicians, if such is the case. If there were more men of Lord Methuen's high principles in the world, and fewer mischief-making politicians of the question-asking order, there would be far less bitterness of feeling among nations, fewer wars, and, as a natural consequence, less occasion for the outburst of righteous indignation to which some have given vent because a brave, but misguided, soldier has been honoured in death by another brave man who has been able to behave generously, in that spirit of chivalry which soldiers understand, but some civilian politicians clearly do not.

Major-General F. S. Russell, M.P., has endeavoured in the House of Commons to draw attention to the wants of the Intelligence Department, and he repeats his plea very forcibly in this month's Blackwood. His article is both a defence and an accusation—a defence of the Department as it exists, and an accusation against the policy that permits it to exist in its present inadequate form. It is now admitted that full details of the numbers, armaments, and preparations of the Boers were furnished to the Government before the war. Notwithstanding this, an entirely erroneous conception of the fighting capabilities and military strength of the two Republics was arrived at. We cannot say that General Russell altogether lays bare the cause of this discrepancy. He has had great experience of the genesis of the Intelligence Department. As we all know, at the time of the Crimean war it did not exist, and vast sums of money were undoubtedly squandered in the Abyssinian Expedition, the Ashanti Expedition of 1873-4, and in the proceedings in regard to the abortive Suakim-Berber railway, which better intelligence would have saved to the country. The Intelligence Department grew out of the "Topographical Staff" of the Quartermaster-General's Department, enlarged and expanded principally through the action of Lord Cardwell. It not infrequently happened that officers in those days made investigations at their own cost. Thus General Russell himself made a very expensive journey through southern Russia, Roumania, and northern Bulgaria early in 1877, and ascertained that war between Russia and Turkey was really inevitable. He reported his convictions, but never received a sixpence towards his expenses, and was practically shelved for a time because his accurate forecast did not coincide with the expressed views of certain high-placed officials. He now declares that the department is ridiculously undermanned, and that the amount devoted to it is contemptible compared with what is expended by other Powers. He refrains from reflecting upon the officers in the local Intelligence Department in South Africa, but cannot help thinking that better results would have been attained if money had been more liberally spent. He holds up the present failure in regard to intelligence as a warning of the serious results that might follow from such defects in case of a European war.

The military critic of Magu dips his pen into gall in writing about some of our recent mishaps. The Koorn Spruit affair is described as a "disgraceful exhibition of carelessness and neglect of orders." In regard to the Reddersburg business he remarks that "General Gatacre seems to have thought the state of the country to be one of profound peace brought about by the surrender of a dozen old sporting rifles." He wholly condemns what he calls the "tactics of trifles," and demands to know when officers will learn that tactics are not all heroic. Words scarcely suffice for the expression of his bitterness in regard to certain episodes: "A heap of stones with a stick in the middle would have saved 600 men and three guns at Stormberg." The publication of the Spion Kop despatches is a sorry subject for the critic's contemplation: "While Lord Roberts is doing justice against offenders in South Africa, the nation asks, 'Who is it that sent out so much incompetence when England's honour was at stake?' At the Horse Guards are books, and files, and pigeon-holes crammed with histories of our soldiers; were they read and acted on? Where is the Promotion Board? Is the long reign of selection fallen?" The critic evidently takes keen delight in this drastic work of tearing off the veils. The smashing up of popular idols has begun; the drawing-room pets have been found out, for does he not see them coming "without their dancing pumps;" and have the heroes of the picture papers done anything pictorial? Such are the uncomfortable reflections and conclusions of an observant and unflinching critic.

An Austrian officer has been giving his views on the British Army. They are fair, but by no means flattering. We are fond of excusing the shortcomings of our Army by pointing out the diverse conditions under which it works in a world-wide Empire such as ours. This is obvious; nevertheless our military system is built up without the slightest reference to it. Our Army, with an entirely different part to play in the world, is trained like Continental armies. Apparently it is taken for granted that "fighting in the Soudan, Afghanistan, and Kaffraria" is done under precisely similar conditions. That they are not we are learning on the battlefields of South Africa for the hundredth time. Text-books and manuals fail to recognise that, if the British Empire is diverse as no empire ever was, warfare within it is diverse on a similar scale. The Austrian officer points out, that the peace training of our Army takes no account of the ambush. Hence our men seldom make use of it successfully, while they are constantly falling into those laid by the enemy. This defect is as old as Colonial warfare. General Braddock made it historical, and it has never wanted illustration from that day down to the convoy disaster at Koom Spruit. Fortunately, there are signs that the War Office is waking up. The orders recently issued with respect to the training of the Militia and Reserve are conceived in a spirit which, had it inspired our military authorities years ago, might have saved the Empire humiliation in South Africa. The necessity for taking advantage of cover, for advancing to the attack in skirmishing order, for entrenching, and other lessons of the war have all at length been taken seriously to heart. To understand the full significance of the reform one must compare the new orders with Lord Wolseley's "Soldier's Pocket Book." What a change is here!

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, in replying to Mr. Wyndham's speech in the House of Commons on the votes for men and money for South Africa, is reported to have said, "With reference to the question of transport, I have always regarded with a certain amount of doubt the theories put forward that when we had built up a thing which we called an Army Corps, we should forthwith proceed to provide it, in days of piping peace, with the full transport it required." Now, although it is costly to maintain a fully sufficient supply and transport service more than would equip an Army Corps of the size sent to South Africa, it is altogether deplorable to "starve" so important a branch as the Army Service Corps. This has clearly been done in the past. It is disastrous to efficiency to withdraw from the companies of the Corps left at home practically all the executive officers and warrant officers. It is certainly so to drain the station of clerks and artificers. No condemnation for such a course is too severe. What is the position of affairs just now? Although the regiments of Infantry withdrawn from home stations can be soon replaced by Militia battalions, there is no reserve of A.S.C. companies to meet emergencies. True it is that a number of retired officers of the Corps have been recalled to serve, but it is only to carry out purely departmental duties such as "barracks." Measures are being taken now to repair in some way the errors of the past. The establishment of officers of the Corps provided for in the Army Estimates, 1899-1900, was: Lieutenant-Colonels, 24; Majors, 21; Captains, 77; Lieutenants, 63; 2nd Lieutenants, 22; Quartermasters, 40; Riding Masters, 3. The War Office proposes to raise these numbers from 250 to 490. The establishment of ranks will be, until further orders, Lieutenant-Colonels, 24; Majors, 55; Captains, 141; Lieutenants, 103; 2nd Lieutenants, 94; Quartermasters, 69; Riding Masters, 3. This establishment of 490 will not include 38 officers employed on the Staff—5, including 2 Quartermasters at Headquarters, and 33 on the General Staff. There can be no question as to the absolute necessity for this augmentation of strength. We have for years appealed to the good sense of the War Office to do something to prepare for evil days. The contention, however, has been that the time had not arrived for any decided action. The decision the War Minister has arrived at to at once raise the establishment of officers, 9th Army Service Corps, is to be commended on every ground, and it is satisfactory to know that already a large number of junior officers have been gazetted and have been posted to stations. The value of an efficient supply of transport service cannot be over-estimated; indeed, the best trained army in the world is powerless without such an organisation. This being the case, it is to be hoped that no difficulty will be experienced in finding the proper number of qualified candidates, so that no delay may occur in bringing the Army Service Corps up to its full strength.

Majors G. H. Hatchell, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, and F. J. Eveleigh, 1st Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, did not land in South Africa with their battalions, having been left behind to take command of battalions of mounted infantry. The units these two officers command in the field are to be congratulated upon having secured the services of two such capable leaders. Not a word can be said against the selections in themselves. At the same time, it is difficult to defend the system which withdraws seconds in command from their own particular spheres of duty at the very moment that the battalions to which they belong are embarked on active service. Infantry battalions in South Africa have been particularly unfortunate in losing their senior officers, several Lieutenant-Colonels having been killed, whilst others are bearing as well as they can the disappointment of an enforced idleness at Pretoria. We may be all wrong; the system by which seconds in command are withdrawn from their regiments to take up odd jobs here, there, and everywhere, may be an excellent one, but to our minds it is open to the most serious objection. Occasionally it may be in the interests of the Service to employ a second in command elsewhere, but in cases where this course has to be adopted the officer should at least be seconded, if not at once promoted to a half pay Lieutenant-Colonelcy. No possible good, it seems to us, can result to a regiment or battalion from the arrangement, lately favoured rather extensively, by which seconds in command are converted into general utility men and keepers of canteens and coffee shops.

We referred last week to a memorial promoted in Parliament and presented to the First Lord of the Treasury praying that pensions should be granted to the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates in the Army, and all petty officers and sailors in the Navy, who may be killed on active service in South Africa. We now learn that the Government is disposed to give favourable consideration to this prayer. Mr. William Allan, who promoted the memorial, has been officially informed that the matter is still under Mr. Balfour's consideration. The First Lord has, however, laid the matters before his colleagues in the Cabinet, and states that he only defers making a definite statement on the subject until he has had time to obtain the opinion of the various departments concerned. It is assumed from this that the Government has already made up its mind to grant pensions to the widows of men who fall in the war, and that the only question which remains to be settled is the mode in which effect shall be given to their decision.

Colonel Sir Howard Vincent intends to bring under notice of Parliament on Monday a matter of considerable interest to the Volunteer force. Increased responsibilities have of late been placed on the shoulders of sergeant-majors of Volunteer corps, and Sir Howard is of opinion that the warrant rank held by their colleagues in the Line and the Militia should be accorded to them. Another matter upon which Sir Howard Vincent proposes to question the Under-Secretary is the insufficient number of sergeant-instructors in the Volunteer force. Now that Volunteer corps have had their establishments increased, there seems nothing unreasonable in asking for additional sergeant-instructors, and the proportion suggested of at least one to every 300 men does not sound extravagant. The proposal that a paid quartermaster should be appointed to every battalion 1,000 strong also deserves consideration. The quartermaster need not necessarily be a full pay officer. To retired quartermasters of the Army the employment would be more acceptable if it carried an increase of pension.

The dispute between Major-General Hutton and the Government of Canada is most unfortunate, the more so as it is a repetition of an oft-told tale. General Hutton, we learn from Canada, has "hosts of sympathisers." It is felt, we are told, that he has fallen a victim, as so many of his predecessors have done, to the prevailing curse of "political wire-pulling." We quote from the letter of a well-known officer of the Colonial forces. We are assured that General Hutton did his utmost to improve the general condition of the Dominion Militia. Of that we are convinced. He sought to do this by enforcing discipline and eliminating all forms of political favour in the distribution of patronage. This did not meet with the approval of certain persons. In his desire to do his duty as a soldier he found himself brought into antagonism with the local Parliament, and the consequence was that he gladly availed himself of the opportunity of proceeding on active service to South Africa. It is only too evident from the letters we have received that General Hutton has left the Dominion regretted by all the officers of the local Militia, who are able to appreciate, as we are told the majority do, "the incalculable mischief which is done to military institutions by the baneful influences of a political supremacy which seeks to distribute patronage rather for services rendered to individuals than on any properly recognised system of merit in a military sense." Those who are able to recall the circumstances in which Generals Luard and Gascoigne and Colonel Ivor Herbert left Canada will be ready to make every allowance for General Hutton. At the same time it is to be regretted that the clock should be put back once more, and that the Dominion forces, full of proper martial spirit as they are, should be made to feel that their efficiency is still to be subordinated to the aspirations of politicians.

During the Crimean war the scouting of the Russians was so weak that it was supposed the changed organisation of the Cossacks had destroyed their efficiency as scouts. From this, and other trustworthy evidence, authorities on the subject drew the conclusion that the conditions of European life are not favourable to the development of the eyes and ears of an army. If this is true, and there is no reason to doubt it, this country has the advantage of all its Continental rivals, for every great colony of the British Empire produces trained scouts in the natural order of things. Colonel Baden-Powell, perhaps the greatest living authority on scouting, and himself an expert, gained his most valuable experience in Matabeleland. The Cape Mounted Rifles, and the Mounted Police of Natal, largely recruited in England, are unrivalled as scouts in their own country. The bushmen of Australia are admirable, but they have yet to earn their military spurs. There remains the North-West Mounted Police, probably the finest corps of its kind in the world. For the past thirty years they have kept order in a region as large as Europe without Russia, and done it so well that the average Briton has never heard of them. This means that a trooper of the force, in addition to being a soldier, policeman, and magistrate, is a first-rate scout. What Burnham did in Matabeleland has been done by him over and over again. The contingent in South Africa known as Lord Strathcona's Horse, and largely recruited from men who have belonged to the corps, have a chance of winning fresh laurels. They, however, believe that there is no scout to be compared to the Red Indian. The Australian "black fellow" is excellent as a tracker, and the Kaffir reads the veldt like an open book. The Red Man can do more, for he can ride like a cowboy, an accomplishment he shares with only one other savage race, the Maori of New Zealand. Moreover, expert opinion in Canada maintains that his sight and hearing are keener than those of a Matabele. To prove whether they are right or not Lord Strathcona's Horse are taking with them to South Africa four Red Indians, nominally as servants, in reality to test their qualities as scouts in a strange country. The experiment is at least interesting, and shows that Canadian rough-riders are in no danger of taking their profession too lightly.

Our public men have certainly proved the sincerity of their patriotic declarations in very fair measure, for the contingent of legislators in active service at the front is very substantial. A return has just been issued giving the names of the Peers and Members of Parliament who are at present serving, or under orders to serve, in South Africa. There are twenty-nine Peers and twenty-five Commoners, which, considering the relative proportion of the two Houses, speaks well for the Lords. We may say with the old Romans that our great Houses "have borne them well in fight." In the twenty-nine Peers we reckon the three commanders—Lord Roberts, Lord Kitchener, and Lord Methuen. The Dukes of Norfolk, Roxburgh, Marlborough, and Westminster are all out in South Africa.

THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL A.M.S.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The Director-General Army Medical Service has a very responsible position in the War Office. He is the head of the Army Medical Service, the Militia and Volunteer Medical Services, and is the adviser of the Secretary of State on all sanitary questions in the Army.

2. He is in many ways a representative man, as the medical profession regard him as the spokesman and figure-head of the large body of medical men connected in various ways with the Army. He is, therefore, constantly invited to represent his Service at London public meetings and functions, and he is compelled, at considerable expense, to be present at such gatherings.

3. As the head of a large branch of the Service he is compelled, to a certain extent, to meet his officers and others in some social manner, and all these duties press heavily from a financial point of view on this official.

4. To repay him for these very anxious and responsible duties his pay is £1,500 a year, with no allowances of any kind; while the pay of the medical officers has risen every decade as the difficulty and strictness of medical education and training has increased, the pay of the Director-General (Army Medical Service), which was £2,000 per annum in pre-Crimean days, has been stationary for many years at £1,500 per annum, to the distinct detriment of the office. England is rich, and is, as a rule, a just and generous mistress, but a pay of £1,500 is quite insufficient for this responsible official, and any Surgeon-General promoted to such a post would certainly be a financial loser by the change. This is surely wrong, and never could have been intended.

5. The Quartermaster-General, the Inspector-General of Fortifications, the Director-General of Ordnance, all receive £2,100 per annum, and no military person to whom I have spoken dissents from the opinion that a just and suitable salary should be given to this high medical official. I, therefore, claim that £2,100 per annum should be his pay; and further, to enable him to meet his officers and know something of them socially, a table allowance as for a District-General should be given him.

6. It is but a very few years since a subscription list was circulated for the relief of the family of a Director-General, an official of a painstaking and hardworking character, who certainly in his life earned more than £1,500 per annum, yet he left his family in poor circumstances.

7. It is the absence of any well-paid appointment, any real rewards for the Medical Service, that makes it the disappointing and unhappy Service that it is, and any money laid out in developing rewards for its best men repays itself amply.

8. Again, this official gets no higher rank than Major-General, a rank in our Army associated with brigade commands. The Director-General Army Medical Service should have the rank of General, and this I believe to be his just status as the responsible chief of the Medical Service.

9. When we remember the incomes realised by the men who come to the front in the civil profession in medicine one can easily see that the military Service is very defectively paid, and if we compare the medical branch of the Army with the military side we shall find also that no corresponding billets carrying a good income exist for medical officers, however efficient they may be.

Army Foreign.

The grand manoeuvres of the German Army this year promise to be particularly interesting, because the new organisation of the field artillery will be tried for the first time. Each division of the two Army Corps which are to manoeuvre before the Emperor will have its brigade of artillery formed of two regiments, and there will be no corps artillery at all. It is noted, also, that the battalions of sappers will also be attached to the divisions, and that, exclusive of cavalry, there will be no troops outside the divisions—that is, attached directly to the Army Corps—except a ballooning section, and, in the case of the Guards, a squadron of mounted orderlies. The cavalry will appear constituted as a division attached to each Army Corps, with regiments assigned to the divisions. It is suggested that the idea is to determine what force of cavalry is really indispensable to an infantry division. In regard to the artillery, it does not seem to be known whether the arrangement we have described implies the final suppression of the corps artillery, or whether the formation of corps artillery in the field will be left to the General in command. The organisation of the Army Corps in three divisions is related to the distribution and mode of employment of the artillery. It would seem, in regard to the related questions of the formation in three divisions and the distribution of the artillery, that the German manoeuvres this year are to be largely experimental.

Every German cavalry regiment is now supplied with two boats made of waterproof canvas, which, when not in use, can be folded up. Each boat will carry from six to eight men, and two boats bound together form a raft capable of bearing from 25cwt. to 27cwt. It is difficult, however, to keep these boats in serviceable condition, and experiments have been made with boats built of aluminium, which are found to be more satisfactory.

The French Minister of War has ordered a course of experimental firing on a large scale to be carried out at the camp at Chalons from June 12 to 30, and again from July 2 to 11. Twenty generals, forty commanders of infantry battalions, and sixty-eight colonels and lieutenant-colonels are to attend the courses. It is believed that the chief object of the firing will be the testing, in actual practice, of a new type of gun.

The French Minister of War has issued a circular to the following effect, relative to the participation of officers in horse-racing and riding competitions:—

"As some differences of opinion exist with reference to the regulations regarding horse-racing and riding competitions, I have decided that the following rules shall be observed:—(1) Officers taking part in a horse race or riding competition, military or civil, must be in uniform. (2) Officers are not permitted to take part in any horse race or riding competition of which the prizes are in money only. (3) Officers are permitted to ride horses other than those entered on the army register, whenever the conditions of the race or competition demand it."

The reinforcement of the Russian garrisons in Transcaspia is attracting a great deal of attention in military circles abroad. For the last six months the garrisons have been methodically increased, and it is said that on the two banks of the Caspian, ready for a forward movement, is a force of 250,000 men. Similar activity has been displayed upon the Afghan frontier, and the reserves of the southern army and the equipages of the ships in the Black Sea are reported to have been placed upon a war footing. The cause of this activity on the part of Russia is obscure, and there seems to be some doubt whether it has relation to the war in South Africa, to the dispute with Japan, or to the attempt to coerce Persia. It is pointed out by military critics abroad that these military preparations of Russia do not necessarily imply aggression; and, in relation to South Africa, it is remarked that Russia has displayed a spirit of moderation. This is perfectly true, and justifies the pacific utterances of the Czar at the outbreak of the war. But these utterances having been justified, it would be unwise to overlook the fact that such a massing of troops might well be in the nature of a demonstration of force to support any plea for intervention. The Government has distinctly said that intervention will not be tolerated, and we may sincerely hope that no power will be so unwise as to step in. Our interests at stake in South Africa are too great to make it possible for us to place the settlement in any other hands than our own.

At the Russian manoeuvres this year the Czar will be present. The Grand Duke Michael Nicolaievitch will be chief umpire. The troops will be divided into two armies, the one consisting of seventy-five battalions, thirty-seven squadrons, and 168 guns, called the Moscow Army, and commanded by the Grand Duke Serge Alexandrovitch, Commander of the Moscow military district; the other consisting of seventy-nine battalions, forty-one squadrons, and 180 guns, called the South Army, and under the command of General Kuropatkin, the Minister of War. Special attention will be given to ascertaining the best means of using the cavalry. The South Army will take the offensive and will cross the Dnieper in its march on Moscow.

The Armeeblatt, of Vienna, states that the Austro-Hungarian Army manoeuvres will take place this year in Galicia. Four Army Corps will be engaged—the first, sixth, tenth, and eleventh—but for the purposes of the manoeuvres these four will be re-formed into five. One army will consist of three Army Corps having two divisions of infantry each, and the opposing army of two Army Corps having three divisions each. Every company will be brought up to its full strength of 130 men by means of reservists. In addition to the regular troops, consisting of 122 infantry battalions, ten Jäger battalions, 20 cavalry regiments, and 72 batteries, eight being horse artillery, there will be 34 Landwehr battalions, 13 Honved battalions, three regiments of Landwehr Uhlans, and one or two regiments of Honved cavalry. The whole of the troops engaged will amount to 179 infantry battalions, 72 batteries, and 25 regiments of cavalry, a larger body of troops than has appeared at the manoeuvres for some years.

MILITARY EDUCATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Amongst the multitude of questions which will crop up with the Army reforms which we are promised as soon as the present war is over there is one which calls for particular consideration, and that is that faith should not be broken with men after joining her Majesty's service. No regulation has ever hit harder than the one issued in 1889 as regards first-class certificates of education. There is no doubt that in making such an order apply to the highest grades of the non-commissioned ranks, ergo warrant officers and quartermaster-sergeants, a direct breach of contract was committed. Numbers of warrant officers and quartermaster-sergeants having received a step in rank are now debarred further promotion without the certificate at a most critical time of their career. Taking into consideration the fact that men holding such ranks are between the age of 35 and 40 years it is difficult to see how they can read up history and geography in the small amount of spare time at their disposal. At a recent examination one of the questions in history was, "Write a short sketch of the life of Mary Queen of Scots." This may be taken as a fair example of the questions put to candidates. How, I ask, can the answering of such questions increase a soldier's value?

Instructions have been given to the Army Recruiting Service in London to make special efforts for the enlistment of printers for the Royal Engineers.

The Prince of Wales will open the Royal Military Tournament at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, on Friday next. The accounts of the Tournament for the half-year ended Dec. 31 last show that the profits from the tournament were £6,000. The sum of £1,400 was paid to the Wolseley Benevolent Fund, and £1,020 to various soldiers' homes and military charities. On December 31 there was a balance in hand of £5,011 19s. 8d. It does not appear that anything, as yet, has been allotted to naval charities. The accounts of the Wolseley Benevolent Fund (English Branch) show a balance at the end of last year of £176 18s. 8d. The accounts are also issued of the Royal Cambridge Fund for Old and Disabled Soldiers, and these show that during 1899 £133 was spent in gratuities and £885 in annuities. The total revenue from subscriptions and dividends was £1,377. The fund holds £36,502 in investments.

Army Personal.

The Duke of Cambridge will preside at the annual dinner of the Institute of Volunteer Commanding Officers at the Grand Hotel on the 22nd inst.

General John Jacobs, of Jacobabad, is to be made the subject of a memoir at last, Mr. A. Innes Shand, author of the "Life of Sir Edward Hamley," having undertaken the task of recounting the events of his remarkable career. The work will appear immediately, and be published by Seeley and Co., Limited, of Great Russell Street.

Lieut.-General E. Hopton, C.B., has been granted an extension of his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Guernsey until November 6 next.

Major-General H. J. T. Hildyard, C.B., has been appointed to the command of the 5th Division (Natal), vice Lieut.-General Sir Charles Warren.

Major-General M. H. Saward, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, has succeeded to colonel's allowances.

The officers brought specially to notice by Lieut.-General J. D. P. French in his despatches relative to the operations carried out under his orders from December 15 to January 25 are:—Major-Generals J. P. Brabazon, C.B., and R. A. P. Clements, D.S.O.; Colonels T. C. Porter, 6th Dragoon Guards; and T. E. Stephenson, 1st Batn. Essex Regiment. Lieut.-Colonels F. J. W. Eustace, R.H.A.; and H. Bowles, 1st Batn. Yorkshire Regiment. Majors G. Carter, 1st Life Guards; F. S. Garratt, 6th Dragoon Guards; E. H. H. Allenby and M. F. Rimington, 6th Dragoons; D. Haig, 7th Hussars; the Hon. H. A. Lawrence, 17th Lancers; Sir J. H. Jervis-White-Jervis and B. Burton, R.H.A.; A. E. Butcher, R.F.A.; F. W. N. McCracken, Royal Berkshire Regiment; G. O. Welch, A.S.C.; H. G. Hathaway, R.A.M.C.; and A. W. Robin, New Zealand Mounted Infantry; Brevet-Major A. G. Hunter-Weston, R.E.; Captains C. Champion de Crespigny, 2nd Life Guards; J. Vaughan, 7th Hussars; Sir J. P. Milbanke and S. L. Barry, 10th Hussars; P. A. Kenna, V.C., 21st Lancers; A. D. A. King, R.H.A.; C. O. C. Bowen, R.E.; M. H. Orr, Yorkshire Regiment; A. H. S. Hart, East Surrey Regiment; H. L. Ruck-Keene, Oxfordshire Light Infantry; Sir T. E. S. Pasley, Royal Berkshire Regiment; H. De B. De Lisle, D.S.O., Durham Light Infantry; T. D. Foster, A.S.C., and J. F. Laycock, Nottinghamshire Yeomanry; Lieutenants E. F. Talbot-Ponsonby, J. W. F. Lamont, J. B. Aldridge, and W. G. Thompson, R.H.A.; C. Russell-Brown, R.E.; L. K. Smith, Royal Scots; Hon. C. R. Clegg-Hill, Royal Welsh Fusiliers; C. Saunders, Dorsetshire Regiment; and A. G. E. Bingley, Royal Berkshire Regiment; and 2nd Lieutenant H. L. Mackworth, R.E..

Last Saturday there died at his residence, 52, Argyll Road, a well-known survivor of the Indian Mutiny, in the person of Sir Roger Tuckfield Goldsworthy, K.C.M.G. After passing a short time at Sandhurst, which he left on account of ill-health, he went out to Calcutta to reside with his father till a commission in the line could be purchased for him. When the Mutiny broke out he and his brother, Major-General Walter Goldsworthy, the respected M.P. for Hammersmith, joined the gentlemen's Volunteer Cavalry Troop, which formed part of Havelock's force. He received a commission without purchase in the 17th Lancers as the reward of his gallantry. As a subaltern in that fine regiment he took part in the Central Indian Campaign. In 1866 he quitted the Army, and soon after obtained employment under the Colonial Office. From that time till ten years later he held various appointments on the West Coast of Africa. In 1891 he became Governor of the Falkland Islands, holding that post till he retired from the service in 1897. Notwithstanding his retirement he offered the Colonial Office, only a few weeks ago, to accept any appointment if at the present conjuncture he could be of use. A handsome, cheery, kind, and generous man, with charming manners, there are many who grieve at his death. He will be much missed at the "Rag," where he was well known and highly respected.

Colonel C. Needham, late 1st Life Guards, whose five years as Military Attaché at Rome expires on the 25th inst., will, as was expected, retain the position until November 25.

Colonel J. M. Babington, on vacating command of a Cavalry Brigade in South Africa, has been appointed A.A.G. to Lieut.-General Sir Herbert Chermiside, commanding the 3rd Division.

There are two Colonels on the active list of the name of Crofton, and some confusion would seem to have arisen in consequence, as both have had South African experience. The senior, Colonel Morgan Crofton, was A.A.G. to Sir William Cameron and Sir William Goodenough, and is now holding a similar appointment at Colchester. The junior, Colonel Malby Crofton, whose name has come to the front in connection with the Spion Kop despatches, went out to Natal at the end of last year in command of the 2nd Batn. King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment, and is now employed on the lines of communication. The officers are cousins.

Colonel G. M. Fox, retired list, lately A.A.G. at York, resumes the duties of Inspector of Gymnasia, vice Colonel the Hon. J. Scott Napier, proceeded on active service.

Colonel the Hon. J. S. Napier, Inspector of Gymnasia at Aldershot, has been appointed an A.A.G. on the lines of communication in South Africa, and has left England for Cape Town to take up his duties.

Colonel W. H. Bayly, retired list, lately commanding the 50th Regimental District, has been appointed to the command of the 2nd Batn. Royal Home Counties Reserve Regiment.

Colonel J. Willcocks, C.M.G., D.S.O., commanding in the Niger Territories, has been selected to command the combined forces which are being despatched to Ashanti to deal with the tribes in rebellion in the district round Kumasi. Colonel Willcocks is an officer of varied experience, who has rendered most valuable service on the West Coast of Africa during the last three years. He is forty-three years of age, and joined the 100th Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant, January 30, 1878; was two years Adjutant, and became Major, September 29, 1893, and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel May 20, 1898. He was a Station Staff Officer Bengal 1890-93, and a D.A.A.G. Bombay 1894-97, vacating in order to accept military service under the Colonial Office. His war services include the Afghan War, 1878-80 (medal); Mahsood Wuzereee Expedition, 1881 (mentioned in despatches); Sudan Expedition, 1885 (medal with clasp and bronze star); Burmese Expedition, 1885-89 (mentioned, medal with two clasps and D.S.O.); Chin-Lushai Expedition, 1889-90 (clasp); Manipur Expedition, 1891 (mentioned, clasp); North-West Frontier operations, India, 1897-98, as an A.A.G. Tochi Field Force (mentioned, brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, medal with clasp); and operations on the Niger, 1897-

98, in command of the force (mentioned, C.M.G., promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, and medal). The direction of affairs may well be left in Colonel Willcocks's capable hands.

Colonel F. A. Graves-Sawle, half-pay, lately commanding the 1st Batn. Coldstream Guards, takes on Monday command of the regiment and North London Infantry Volunteer Brigade, vice Colonel the Hon. H. W. L. Corry.

Colonel R. G. Kekewich, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, in his despatch to the Secretary of State for War, dated February 15, and published in the Gazette of Tuesday last, brings to notice the officers who particularly distinguished themselves during the siege of Kimberley. Amongst the Regular officers mentioned as deserving of special recognition are Majors G. D. Chamier, R.G.A., and W. H. E. Murray, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment; Brevet-Major H. S. Turner, Black Watch (who unfortunately lost his life in action); Captains T. H. O'Brien, H. V. Gorie, A.S.C., and W. A. J. O'Meara, R.A.M.C.; Lieutenants D. S. MacInnes, R.E., F. W. Woodward, R. L. MacClintock, C. du Purton, and W. Clifford; 2nd Lieutenant A. McC. Webster; Sergeant-Major E. C. Mudge; Sergeants H. Herbert and H. Hellard; and Corporals J. Hopwood and F. Benwell, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Colonel Kekewich also mentions a number of brave and gallant officers of the Cape Police, colonial and local forces, of whose soldierly qualities in circumstances of the greatest difficulty he speaks in the highest possible terms. They rendered, he says, the most valuable service and showed themselves well fitted to lead men in action, being resourceful and brave. Of the whole of the Irregular forces he writes in terms of the highest approval.

Colonel C. Conor, retired list, late Duke of Wellington's Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the 2nd Batn. Royal Southern Reserve Regiment.

Colonel A. H. Luck, half-pay, late York and Lancaster Regiment, takes over command of the 2nd Batn. Royal Northern Reserve Regiment, to which Colonel C. Conor had been posted.

Lieut.-Colonel C. G. Jeans, A.O.D., has been appointed an Assistant-Director-General of Ordnance at Headquarters.

Lieut.-Colonel T. Harris, retired list, has been appointed to the command of the 3rd Batn. Royal Northern Reserve Battalions.

Lieut.-Colonel C. E. de la P. Beresford, Military Attaché at St. Petersburg, is now on a tour of inspection of the Russian garrisons in Central Asia, accompanied by an officer of the General Staff, Captain A. C. Snessareff. Colonel Beresford recently arrived at Tashkend, having been permitted to visit Ak-Tepe, Askhabad, Samarcand, Margilan, Andijan, and Osch.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel J. Adye, R.A., has been appointed to the command of the troops in the districts of Gordon, Kenhardt, and Prieska, by Lord Roberts.

Passed final examination, advanced class, Ordnance College, Woolwich:—Captain A. S. Baker, R. A. Craig, W. H. W. Hope, and F. M. Rickard, R.A., and Assistant Commissary of Ordnance M. Spencer, A.O.D.

Passed final examination, ordnance course, Ordnance College, Woolwich:—Majors W. E. Kerrich, A. R. Braid, and A. B. Denne; Captains J. R. Stansfield, A. H. Woodfield, J. A. Stewart, F. L. Galloway, and G. E. Carter, R.A.; MacG. Greer, Royal Warwickshire Regiment; and F. Langlands, West India Regiment; and Lieutenants F. J. Odevaine and K. L. Stevenson, R.A.

The officers forming the advanced class, Ordnance College, now assembled for the course of study are:—Majors A. B. Denne, J. R. Stansfield, F. L. Galloway, and S. C. Halse, R.A.; J. F. Bernard, Royal Malta Artillery; MacG. Greer, Royal Warwickshire Regiment; and P. Langlands, West India Regiment; and Lieutenants F. J. Odevaine and K. L. Stevenson, R.A.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, May 5.

Lord Roberts proceeded to Vet River with Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew's Division. On arrival the enemy were found in considerable force on the opposite bank. Our guns engaged theirs for three hours, but were unable to force a passage; but shortly before dusk the mounted infantry, under Major-Gen. Hutton, turned the enemy's right, and pushed across the river under a heavy shell and musketry fire.

Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton reported by Lord Roberts to be advancing from Neal Welkot, a place which it is impossible unfortunately to find on any map, having fought a most successful action yesterday, in which he succeeded in preventing the junction of two Boer forces by a well-executed movement by the cavalry of Major-Gen. Broadwood's Brigade, consisting of the "Householders," 12th Lancers, and Kitchener's Horse, who charged a large body of the enemy and inflicted so much loss that they fled before them, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. Major-Gen. MacDonald's Highland Brigade dislodged the enemy. Meanwhile, on the right flank, under cover of the Naval guns, the Black Watch very skilfully led, greatly distinguished themselves.

Major-Gen. Barton's Brigade, with Sir Archibald Hunter's force for the relief of Kimberley, was heavily engaged with the enemy during the morning two miles north of Ruidam. The enemy's position said to have been quite two miles long. Our troops, to quote the words of the despatch, "marched magnificently, and carried ridge after ridge in grand style."

Sunday, May 6.

The force under Lord Roberts crossed the Vet River and encamped at Smaldeel Junction. The enemy had left during the night, taking the road to the Zand River and Kroonstad.

They were found to-day also to have retired from the front of Thaba N'chu, abandoning an exceedingly strong position, which was occupied by the 8th Division under Sir Leslie Rundle.

Lord Roberts in his despatch sent off to-day spoke in high terms of the Colonial contingent in yesterday's action at Vet River. "They vied with one another," it is said, "in their determination to close with the enemy, whilst the turning movement executed by them with the greatest gallantry resulted in the hasty retreat of the Boers."

Monday, May 7.

In a despatch sent from Smaldeel at 10.55 a.m. Lord Roberts reported that Sir A. Hunter had joined hands with Major-Gen. Paget near Warrenden. The enemy left 13 killed and wounded on the ground after the action of Friday last, and several prisoners were captured, our losses being slight. "Hunter," it is said, "speaks in high terms of the gallantry of the Yeomanry under Col. Meyrick."

Tuesday, May 8.

Lord Roberts telegraphed that the railway between Smaldeel and Brandfort has been considerably damaged, and the bridge over the Vet River hopelessly so. This delays the arrival of supplies. The reconnaissances by mounted infantry and cavalry to the Zand River yesterday showed the enemy to be in force there. His lordship also reported the occupation by the British of the Boer position at Fourteen Streams. The position evacuated by the enemy very hurriedly in consequence of Gen. Hunter's rapid march on their flank after the victory at Ruidam, in which the Boers lost more heavily than was at first supposed.

The London Gazette published a despatch from Col. Kekewich to Lord Roberts, describing the military operations in the vicinity of Kimberley from Sept. 13, 1899, to Feb. 15, 1900, and the defence of the town up to the latter date, when its relief was effected by the Cavalry Division under Lieut.-Gen. French. Also a covering despatch from Lord Roberts, in which he expresses the opinion that "the greatest credit is due to Lieut.-Col. Kekewich for the able dispositions which he made for the defence of Kimberley, an unvalued town spread over a wide area; for his rapid organisation of an auxiliary force which, in conjunction with the Regular troops, enabled him to keep the enemy in check; and for the tact, judgment, and resolution which he displayed throughout the siege." Lord Roberts also thinks that "the services of the officers and men of the Regular, Colonial, Volunteer, and Irregular forces, and of the Town Guard are deserving of recognition, and that the citizens of Kimberley—especially Mr. Cecil Rhodes and the Mayor and ex-Mayor—rendered most valuable assistance."

Wednesday, May 9.

Lord Roberts concentrated his forces at Welgelegen. These consisted of the 7th and 11th Divisions, under Lieut.-Gens. Tucker and Pole-Carew, Lieut.-Gen. French's four brigades of cavalry, and Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton's column, made up of the 9th Division, Mounted Infantry, and heavy guns of the Division, Mounted Infantry and Garrison Artillery. He telegraphed in the evening, "The enemy hold the opposite bank of the Zand River. Their strength will be ascertained to-morrow, when I hope to be able to force the passage."

By 9.10 a.m. Lord Roberts was able to telegraph to the Secretary of State for War that he had carried out his intention of forcing a passage of the Zand River, but at that time the enemy held a strong position from which they were gradually being pushed back. After three hours' fighting the enemy were in full retreat, and at 1 p.m. Lord Roberts sent official news of his victory, stating that the enemy had occupied a position 20 miles in length, whilst ours was "necessarily longer." The Cavalry and Horse Artillery were pursuing on three different roads.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Reetspruit (eight miles north of the river) at 8.55 p.m., telling the Minister for War that he has had "a successful day and driven enemy from point to point." French, with Porter's and Dickson's Brigades of Cavalry, and Hutton's Mounted Infantry, it appears, crossed the Zand at Vermulen's Kraal, and then worked round in north-east direction to Maatschappij, being opposed continuously by the enemy. Pole-Carew's Division and Gordon's Cavalry Brigade, accompanied by J Battery, R.H.A., and Henry's and Ross's Mounted Infantry, crossed the river by another drift. Ian Hamilton's force, with Broadwood's Cavalry Brigade, was making for the cross roads near Ventersburg. Hamilton's column met with a stubborn resistance, and Smith-Dorrien's Brigade was engaged for some hours protecting the rear flank of his force.

Friday, May 11.

Lord Roberts was to have moved at daybreak with the intention of pushing forward as far in the direction of Kroonstad as possible.

The 1st Batn. East Lancashire Regiment and 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment are said by the special correspondent of the Central News to have displayed admirable fighting qualities during the action. To quote the words of the message:—

"The East Lancashires and the Sussex men had by 11 o'clock worked well to the front. An order was given, and like a flash these two splendid regiments sprang forward simultaneously, and in a few moments had secured two commanding ridges. When our advanced line was within 500 yards of the enemy's main trench they seemed to have lost heart. They kept up a rapid but a wild fire, and at this moment the order for the final charge was given. Away went the Lancashire and Sussex lads again, but the Boers could not stand. They fairly bolted, and the rout of the enemy along the whole line was then complete."

To the south-east the Boers have moved from Ladybrand to Cloccolan, and are understood to be strongly posted near Mequatlings Nek. Sir Leslie Rundle has disposed his troops in such a way as to hold the country south of Ladybrand and Winburg. Lord Roberts notified that he had received "a cheery telegram from Col. Baden-Powell, dated April 27."

PATRIOTIC BRISTOL.

We have received the report of the Crimea Bristol and Indian Mutiny Veterans' Association for 1899. In Bristol the old soldier is honoured as he ought to be, and every endeavour is made to render his old age free from anxiety. This happy condition of things is brought about by the exertions of those who have taken a lead in establishing the Veterans' Association, an organisation which is doing an incalculable amount of good, supported as it is by all classes of the community, and especially the clergy, who lose no opportunity of marking their sympathy with the cause. It is a pity that similar organisations do not exist in all large centres of industry. We trust the feeling of admiration for the self-sacrificing devotion of our national defenders produced by the present war will have the effect of drawing attention to a want which exists so generally throughout the country. If this is the case the rules of the Bristol Association may well be taken as a model, for they are framed on the soundest principles. In all matters of patriotism Bristol, to its great credit be it said, has ever given a lead, and the generous support extended to the association, with which the report before us deals, is evidence that the patriotism of the capital of the West is not of the cheap sort, but is established on the sounder basis of practical co-operation of a character to ensure success.

CAVALRY SCOUTING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Kindly permit me to bring before your notice a fault which I think will in some measure account for the seemingly bad scouting done by the cavalry in South Africa. In the first place, in peace time the cavalryman is given no encouragement to make himself efficient in this most important part of his duties. For instance, speaking of my own regiment, the regiment is ordered for reconnaissance, the scheme is read out on parade after the troops are all formed up ready to march off. The day's work is never explained to the men, and yet they are expected to know all about it when questioned, whether they have been able to hear or not. Another item is that a man is never allowed to use his own common sense whether on outpost duty or reconnaissance. He gets an order to go a certain distance and do a certain thing in a certain time, and if he does not comply with that order exactly, inquiries are made as to what he has been doing. Of course, we know that some men are not to be trusted out of sight, because if they get away from their party on a message, the first thing is to look for a beershop, sit and pass away their time there; but what I mean to convey is, would it not be better to encourage the men to learn to take notice of all visible signs, such as tracks, landmarks, and to learn to find their way by direction, also how to make themselves as invisible as possible to an enemy? Now, we will say an outpost line is formed, and the Inspector-General of Cavalry is going to inspect it. All the oldest soldiers are picked out and placed in responsible positions to answer questions put by the General. A recruit, therefore, gets no chance whatever of learning anything but what he picks up through his own intelligence, readiness, and grasp. I know for a fact there are men in my regiment with three years' service who, if they were asked what the duties of a dismounted sentry over a picquet were, could not tell. The reason is that they have never been told, and, taking no interest in the matter themselves, they do not care to inquire. The whole idea seems to be to get work over as quickly as possible and get back to barracks. Thus the outpost scheme is in no way made interesting, and no effort whatever is made to teach the men. You can hear men remarking after a morning's work, "The same old route again; I suppose if we were to get off that road we should lose ourselves." And it is more or less true, for the same old route is gone over again and again; consequently, when the men get in a strange country, they do lose themselves. We are still doing and doing the same old show movements, and ignoring the important duties of reconnaissance and scouting. My idea is that the men should have good lectures on both these duties, and then be taken out and occasionally allowed to use their own common sense as to what they would do if they were placed in such and such a position. I have brought these facts to your notice because there are men who would like to become efficient in these duties, men who love practical soldiering, but get no chance whatever of showing their abilities. What soldiers require in the Cavalry Service is encouragement. There is little of this given now, and discipline and efficiency both suffer accordingly.

PRACTICAL SOLDIER.

The sixtieth annual meeting of the Royal School for Naval and Marine Officers' Daughters was held last week at the R. U. S. Institution, Admiral Sir H. F. Nicholson presiding. A special appeal was made on behalf of the institution, which was originated in 1840 by Admiral Sir Thomas Williams with the object of affording at the lowest possible cost practicable a good, virtuous, and religious education in conformity with the principles and doctrines of the Church of England. Eighty-five pupils are received, the institution defraying the larger amount of cost from voluntary subscriptions. Notwithstanding a carefully and economically controlled expenditure, it exceeded the income last year by £235. The Chairman, in reference to this matter, said he could only think that the claims of the institution were not placed before the officers in the best way, and suggested that more up-to-date methods should be adopted.

Obituary.

ARMY.

Sir Roger Tuckfield Goldsworthy, K.C.M.G., died suddenly at his residence in Argyll Road, W., on the 5th inst. He was a son of the late Mr. T. Goldsworthy, of Calcutta, and was born in 1839. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and served with the Volunteer Cavalry under Gen. Havelock in the Indian Mutiny (twice mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp). He afterwards received a commission in the 17th Lancers, and subsequently served in the 9th Lancers until his retirement in 1866. In 1868-9 he was Inspector General of Police at Sierra Leone; Commandant of the Housa Armed Police, and District Magistrate at Lagos from 1870 to 1873; Collector of Customs on the Gold Coast in the latter year, and in command of the Volta Expedition. He was President of the Island of Nevis in 1876-7, Colonial Secretary for Western Australia 1877-80, Administrator and Colonial Secretary of St. Lucia 1881-4, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of British Honduras 1884-91, and of the Falkland Islands 1891-7. He was created a C.M.G. in 1874, and K.C.M.G. in 1899.

Gen. Alexander Robert Manson, retired list, Bombay Infantry, died in London on the 28th ult., aged 76. He joined the Army Dec. 10, 1839; became Captain July 1, 1849; Major Dec. 10, 1855; Lieutenant-Colonel April 26, 1859; Colonel May 18, 1864; Major-General March 6, 1868; Lieutenant-General Aug. 15, 1878; and General Nov. 28, 1885. He served in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, and was present at the siege and surrender of Mooltan, and storm and capture of the town (medal with clasp); in the Persian campaign of 1856-57, including the storm and capture of Reshire, surrender of Bushire, and battle of Khooshab (medal with clasp), and commanded his regiment at the action with the rebels under Tantia Topse near Khooshab (brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, medal).

Lieut.-Gen. Augustus Henry Lane Fox-Pitt-Rivers, Colonel of the South Lancashire Regiment, died at his residence, Rushmore, on the 4th inst. He was the only surviving son of the late Mr. W. A. Lane-Fox of Hope Hall by his marriage with the daughter of the eighteenth Earl of Morton. He assumed the name of Pitt-Rivers by Royal licence in 1880, in accordance with the will of the second Baron Rivers. Born in 1820 he joined the Grenadier Guards as Ensign and Lieutenant May 16, 1845; became Lieutenant and Captain Aug. 2, 1850; Brevet-Major Dec. 13, 1854; Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel May 15, 1857; Colonel Jan. 22, 1867; Major-General Oct. 1, 1877; retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General Oct. 1, 1882; and was appointed Colonel of the South Lancashire Regiment March 3, 1893. He served in the Eastern campaign 1854-55 as D.A.Q.M.G., including the battle of Alma and siege of Sebastopol (medal with two clasps, 5th class of the Medjidie and Turkish medal). He was an enthusiastic antiquarian. He married in 1853 the Hon. Alice Margaret, daughter of the second Baron Stanley of Alderley. The remains of the deceased officer were cremated at Woking, and the funeral ceremony took place at Tollard Royal, Wiltson, Thursday.

Major-Gen. Arthur Robert MacDonnell, Colonel, retired list, Royal Engineers, died at his residence, Nairn, on the 3rd inst., aged 64. The youngest son of the late Very Rev. R. MacDonnell, D.D., Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, he joined the Army Oct. 23, 1854; became Captain April 1, 1861; Major Aug. 15, 1868; Lieutenant-Colonel July 11, 1877; Colonel July 11, 1881; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Sept. 8, 1884. He served throughout the Abyssinian Expedition 1867-68, in command of the Bombay Sappers and Miners, and was present at the action of Arogee and capture of Magdala (mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major and medal).

Surgeon-Gen. Nesbitt Heffernan, retired list, Army Medical Service, died at Eton Lawn, Cheltenham, on the 3rd inst., aged 85. He joined the Army June 11, 1841; became Surgeon Nov. 7, 1851; Surgeon-Major June 11, 1861; Deputy-Surgeon-General March 9, 1867; and retired with the honorary rank of Surgeon-General April 28, 1876.

Major Edward Lennox Jervis, late 6th Dragoon

Guards, has just died at the age of 65. He was the last surviving son of Sir John Jervis, sometime Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. Educated at Eton, he joined the 13th Light Dragoons July 11, 1851; became Lieutenant June 18, 1852; Captain Dec. 8, 1854; Major Feb. 21, 1860; and afterwards retired by sale of his commission. He served with the regiment in the Eastern campaign 1854-55, including the reconnaissance to Silestria with Lord Cardigan, the affair of Bulganak and M'Kenzie's Farm, the battles of Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman and Tchernaya, and siege and fall of Sebastopol. He had his horse shot under him at Balaklava (medal with clasp, and Turkish medal).

Major John Wallace Dunlop Adair, late of the 5th Fusiliers, died at the Sycamores, Bathford, Bath, on the 5th inst., aged 70 years. He served with the 5th Fusiliers during the Indian Mutiny, including Havelock's advance on Lucknow, actions of Mungarwar and Alumbagh, assault of Lucknow, relief of the Residency (horse shot), and sortie of Sept. 26. He was severely wounded on Sept. 27, and specially noticed by Gen. Havelock for gallantry on Sept. 25 (medal with clasp and grant of a year's service).

Capt. Charles Ernest Rose, Royal Horse Guards, was killed in action near Wellow on the 4th inst. Born Dec. 11, 1872, he joined the Blues as 2nd Lieutenant April 23, 1892; became Lieutenant April 5, 1893; and Captain Oct. 9, 1899. He served in the operations on the North West Frontier of India 1897-98 with the Tirah Field Force as extra orderly officer (medal with two clasps), and in the operations in Sierra Leone 1898-99 (medal with clasp).

Capt. Edward Greville Verschoyle, 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards, died from wounds received in action at Thaba N'chu, on the 5th inst. Born Nov. 5, 1866, he joined the Grenadier Guards as Lieutenant May 23, 1885; and became Captain Oct. 26, 1897. He served in the Nile Expedition, 1898, including the battle of Khartoum (medal and Egyptian medal).

Capt. Richard Gordon Beresford Lovett, 1st Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, died on the 4th inst. of wounds received in action near Brandfort. Born April 17, 1870, he joined the Royal Welsh Fusiliers as 2nd Lieutenant March 4, 1891; became Lieutenant August 2, 1893, and Captain April 19, 1899. He was employed with the Army Pay Department 1898-99, but on his battalion being ordered on active service at once threw up his appointment in order to accompany it.

Captain Henry Esmonde Dowse, Royal Army Medical Corps, died at Bloemfontein on the 5th inst. Born Jan. 20, 1868, he joined the Army Jan. 31, 1891, and served in the Chitral Expedition 1895, with the relief force (medal with clasp).

Lieut. Edwin Harold St. Leger Chamier, Royal Field Artillery, died at Bloemfontein on the 7th inst. of enteric fever. Born Aug. 17, 1876, the eldest son of E. F. Chamier of Goodrest, Exmouth, he joined the Royal Artillery Nov. 2, 1895. On the outbreak of the war he left the 5th Field Battery at Fermoyle to join the 9th Ammunition Column, with which he did duty up to the time that he went on to the sick list.

THE 15TH HUSSARS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—As an old officer of the regiment may I be allowed through your columns to draw attention to the great injustice now being suffered by the 15th Hussars. Lieut.-Col. Gordon, than whom no better soldier or popular commanding officer could be found, was three months ago transferred to the command of the 17th Lancers in South Africa, and has since been appointed to a brigade command. Meanwhile the 15th Hussars are left without a lieutenant-colonel. I maintain that this proceeding is not only unfair to the regiment, but to the Service. Far be it from me to desire to detract from the merits of my old friend, Col. Gordon, but, seeing how lucky he has been, he would be the last, I feel sure, to wish that Major de Crespigny and the officers of his regiment generally should suffer by his absence. To be just one must be generous; but it is asking a little too much of human nature to expect it to view with generosity the existing arrangement by which one officer is gaining all the credit and the glory, whilst his next junior is given all the work, responsibility of actual command, and is even denied the titular rank which should accompany it. Knowing Col. Gordon well, I am fully aware that he would be the last to countenance such a scandalous injustice; but there the matter stands. I trust, however, that you, with your usual sense of justice, will allow me to draw attention to the case, as evidently, in the pressure occasioned by the war, there has been an oversight.

Mr. Wyndham stated in reply to a question in the House of Commons last week:—"There are at present 11 Reserve battalions, with an establishment of 28 officers and 978 men each and a total strength of 149 officers and 13,187 men. The total number of applications for all arms was 28,009."

THE RESERVE OF OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have read with interest "A Regular Reserve Officer's" letter in your issue of the 14th ult. There ought, of course, to be separate lists for the Reserve officers of the different branches of Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers. Why a Militia or Volunteer officer who happens to be on the Reserve should be placed in command of Regulars when in no case would he be so while still in his own corps beats understanding. Of course, a Reserve officer at present wears the uniform of the corps he last served in, so I presume that an officer with an M on his shoulder-straps would be junior to a Line Reserve officer of the same rank. It is so much easier to obtain the rank of captain in the Volunteers or Militia than in the Regular Army that it is only fair to the Regulars to have separate lists and to give them the full benefit of their presumably superior knowledge of the profession. The position of Line Reserve officers, who are employed with regular or other troops, requires serious consideration. I know of a case where a Line Reserve captain of about eighteen years' service has been called up to serve at his depot without his consent being asked. He will appear in the Army List at the bottom of the list of captains in his regiment, some of whom have about six years' service. In the case I mention there is serving at the depot one of the junior captains, and he will command an officer old enough to be his father. In fact, it is quite possible to imagine a case of this sort where a father might become junior to his own son. The only remedy to all this is that Line Reserve officers returning in war time to their regiments or depots should not be placed junior to the officers they previously commanded. They ought at the very least to return to the numerical place on the list they previously held—say sixth down the list of captains or ninth down the list of subalterns as the case might be. The Reserve officers when employed would then have a reasonable chance of promotion to a higher rank (in the Reserve of Officers), which is only fair. I agree with your correspondent that it is nonsense appointing Militia and Volunteer officers who are still serving to the Reserve. What is gained by having them on both lists?

EX-LINESMAN.

An order has been given for the Volunteer Garrison Artillery throughout the country to be supplied with the 4.7 in. quick-firing gun, and this will soon be followed by an order for the Volunteer Field Artillery to be equipped with the 15pr. B.L. field gun. To meet the great demand for new guns the Royal Gun Factory at Woolwich is being enlarged,

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards will go to Stoney's Castle for musketry from the 18th to the 30th inst.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Lieut. the Hon. A. V. Meade, who has been dangerously ill at Wynberg, is now progressing favourably.

13th Hussars.—There is still good news of Capt. MacLaren from Mafeking. He is said to be progressing favourably, according to a despatch from Col. Plumer's camp on the 23rd ult.

14th Hussars.—Capt. Miller, who was taken prisoner by the Boers in the fighting near Thaba N'chu, was sent at the end of last week into Sir Leslie Rundle's camp by the enemy, with a severe wound in the abdomen. He is said to be progressing favourably.

19th Hussars.—A special dépôt was formed at Canterbury on the 4th inst.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Mr. Wyndham, answering a question of Sir Charles Dilke in the House of Commons on Monday, said:—"Thirteen majors and 10 captains posted to the newly raised field batteries are in South Africa, and will come home as soon as they can be spared. There are 31 lieutenant-colonels, 64 majors, and 12 captains of Royal Artillery in receipt of retired pay with a liability for service. Of these two lieutenant-colonels, 22 majors, and seven captains have been employed."

Lieut.-Col. A. J. Montgomery, R.F.A., sailed from Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England, in the Nile, invalided.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major H. S. King has been selected to raise and command the new 52nd (Fortress) Company; Major T. A. Cregan the new 54th (Fortress) Company; Major H. L. C. Stafford the new 55th (Field) Company; and Captain C. R. Dobbs the new 56th (Field) Company.

The 58th, 59th, and 60th Companies will be formed from the 16th inst., Capt. R. F. Sorebie taking command of the 58th, Capt. H. W. Weekes of the 59th, and Major W. Yolland of the 60th.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards.—Major Bateson, R.A.M.C., has been appointed to the regiment as Surgeon-Major.

Queen's (2nd).—Lieut. McNamara, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England, invalided, in the Nile.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Major Dashwood has been appointed second in command of the 1st Batn. Lieut. Lord Encombe, 5th Batn., has been appointed A.D.C. to Gen. Sir F. Grenfell at Malta.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—Lieut.-Col. Park, 1st Batn., has arrived home from South Africa, invalided, after having commanded his battalion throughout the siege of Ladysmith. Col. Park, we are glad to say, is much improved in health since he left Cape Town.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Hon. Lieut.-Col. Llewellyn, 4th Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 2nd inst. for England, in command of invalids, on board the Aurania.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—Capt. Goode, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for eight months, on medical certificate.

Leicestershire Regiment (17th).—Capt. Cox, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 1st inst. in the Nile, invalided.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Capt. and Adj. Hull, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 1st inst. in the Nile, invalided.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Details moved on the 3rd inst. from Lichfield to Aldershot.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Capt. Thellusson, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 2nd inst. in the Aurania for England, invalided.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th).—Capt. Trevor-Battye, 3rd Batn., left Cape Town on the 2nd inst. for England in the Aurania, invalided.

Border Regiment (34th).—Capt. Cooch has been granted an extension of appointment as Adjutant of the 3rd (Militia) Batn. until July 1.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—Details moved on the 3rd inst. from Aldershot to Lichfield.

South Lancashire Regiment (40th).—Major Adam has left the dépôt at Warrington and is en route to the Cape in the Cheshire to join headquarters.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—Capt. Lomax, who died in action at Driefontein on March 10, aged 31 years, appointed as his executors Mr. Adolphus Tooth, of 36, Lincoln's Inn Fields, solicitor, and Mr. James Morris, of 12, Elgin Mansions, Maida Vale, to each of whom he bequeathed £50. Capt. Lomax bequeathed to the Royal United Service Institution his books,

"Standing Orders of the 41st Regiment, 1830," and "Richardson's War of 1812"; to the officers of the 1st Batn. Welsh Regiment £50 for the purchase of a silver cup as a memorial; and to the Sergeants' Shooting Club of the said regiment £20, "in the hope that it may encourage them in the pursuit of good marksmanship." He left to the Vicar of St. John's, Cardiff, and to the Vicar of Llandaff £20 each for charitable purposes; and to the Dean and Chapter of Llandaff Cathedral £90, for the purpose of erecting a marble tablet in memory of the testator, to be placed beneath the colours of the 41st Regiment in Llandaff Cathedral. Capt. Lomax bequeathed £10 each to the Chelsea Hospital for Women, the Veterans' Fund 41st Regimental District, the Army Temperance Association, the British Home for Incurables, and to the Society for Finding Employment for Soldiers of the First-Class Reserve; and he left his residuary estate in trust to pay the income to his wife, Mrs. Annette Lomax, and, subject to her life interest, for his children. The estate has been valued at £19,279 16s. 7d., including personality of the net value of £18,975 9s. 1d. "Billy," the regimental goat, came under fire in one of the actions near Bloemfontein, and a correspondent sends the Westminster Gazette an amusing account of how he stood it:—

"Billy was following the regiment, when all of a sudden a shot from a Boer pom-pom, a gun which our soldiers have nick-named 'Ten-a-penny,' fell in front of him. Billy, evidently thinking that this was outside the contract, very nearly ran away with the man in charge of him, but at last he was got under control and taken to the river. We regret, however, to hear that the adventure has seriously affected Billy's temper. Since the occurrence it has been dangerous for anyone to go within range of his horns, and he tries to make up for his scare over the pom-pom shell by making charges whenever he gets a chance. This war-like goat has marched all the way with the men, and the officers mean to put in a claim for a medal for him."

2nd Lieut. Lloyd sailed from Cape Town on the 2nd inst. in the Aurania, for England, invalided.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (47th).—The Queen has sent to Col. Kekewich a signed photograph of herself, in recognition and appreciation of his valued services during the long and resolute defence of Kimberley.

Border Regiment (55th).—Capt. Bosanquet is acting temporarily as District Inspector of Musketry at Aldershot.

East Lancashire Regiment (59th).—Capt. Carson has been granted leave from India to England for six months on medical certificate.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Major Kays has been appointed second in command of the 3rd Batn. Capt. Northey, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Aurania on the 2nd inst., invalided. Lieuts. Jelf and Stirling, and 2nd Lieut. Dalrymple, sailed from Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England in the Nile, invalided.

York and Lancaster Regiment (65th).—Brevet Lieut.-Col. Plumer, it is satisfactory to know, was "practically well again" on April 23, when a dispatch was sent from his camp. The bullet had been extracted from the leg of Capt. Rolf, and he, too, was doing well.

Hampshire Regiment (67th).—Capt. Shaw sailed from Cape Town on the 2nd inst. for England in the Aurania, invalided.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—Major Allen, 3rd Batn., has been appointed A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Butler at Devonport.

Middlesex Regiment (77th).—Lieut. and Qrmr. Piens, 4th Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England in the Nile, to join his new unit on promotion.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Lieut. Stevens sailed from Cape Town for England on the 2nd inst. in the Aurania, invalided.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—Capt. Rice acts as Brigade Major of the Militia Brigade at Colchester for the drill season.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—2nd Lieut. Arbuthnot-Leslie sailed from Cape Town on the 2nd inst. for England in the Aurania, invalided.

Leinster Regiment (100th).—Headquarters and the service companies arrived at Cape Town on Thursday.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (101st).—An Army order says:—"Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to direct that the increase of the Royal Munster Fusiliers by two line battalions shall not be proceeded with, it is hereby notified that the instructions concerning the designations of the line battalions and the renumbering of the Militia battalions of that regiment, promulgated by Army Order 50 of 1900, are cancelled."

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—Capt. Higginson sailed from Cape Town for England on the 1st inst. in the Nile, invalided.

King's Own Light Infantry (105th).—Capt. Taylor and 2nd Lieut. Walker is on passage home from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle, invalided. They sailed on the 27th ult.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (108th).—Capt. Cunliffe has been granted leave from India to England for nine months on urgent private affairs.

Rifle Brigade.—Major Wilson, 1st Batn., has been appointed second in command of the 4th Batn.

Army Service Corps.—The new 47th Company is in course of formation at Chatham, having been taken on to the establishment from the 1st inst. Major E. R. O. Ludlow sailed from Cape Town in the Nile on the 1st inst. for England, invalided. Comforts, especially in the way of warm under-clothing, cardigans, and socks, or money to purchase them, are much needed by the men of the corps. It is feared the generous public do not realise that this Corps has now over 4,000 men at the front, and that the arduous nature of their duties causes a great amount of wear and tear, for when other troops may be resting, their work continues without intermission. Col. Ward has wired to his sister from Bloemfontein asking for assistance in this way. A fair supply has been sent out, but nothing in comparison to the requirements of such a large body. Any contributions will be gratefully received by Mrs. Seales, 14, Drummond Place, Edinburgh; Mrs. Knocker, Rosecliff, Saltash, Cornwall; Mrs. Bridge, 20, The Avenue, Colchester; Mrs. Atcherley, 1, Driffield Terrace, The Mount, York; Mrs. Ford, Carrington House, Alexandra Road, Farnborough, Hants; Mrs. Oughterson, C.O.'s Quarters, A.S.C. Barracks, Woolwich; Mrs. Parkyn, Montague House, Vanbrugh Park, S.E.; Col. Heath, A.S.C., Dover; Col. Hadfield, A.S.C., Royal Barracks, Dublin; Col. Wilson, D.A.A.G., Cork; and Col. Parkyn, D.A.A.G., Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. Capt. J. A. R. Purvis sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Lismore Castle, invalided. Capt. E. Studdert is on passage home from the Cape, invalided.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—The Honorary Secretary, Mrs. Frank Howard, 28, Cathcart Road, S.W., of the Corps' Stall, at the National Bazaar to be held at the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, on May 24-26, earnestly requests contributions or donations, however small, towards the success of her stall. Lieut.-Colonel L. Mapleton and Major Reilly sailed from Cape Town on the 1st inst. for England in the Nile, invalided.

THE HEALTH OF THE ARMY.

The report of the Army Medical Department for the year 1898 states that, among the troops serving in the United Kingdom, the total number of admissions to hospital and the mortality rates, while somewhat higher than those of 1897, compare favourably with the average rates for the ten years, 1888-97. There was no special prevalence of eruptive fevers, but enteric fever caused much more sickness than in the previous year, the incidence of the disease being largely influenced by the return of troops from the Khartoum expedition. Dublin again gave the highest rate of prevalence at any one station; but the number of cases there showed a falling off. Of the total number of cases in other stations, only eight were attributed to definite defects in barracks. Influenza was much more prevalent than in 1897, but it did not appear in epidemic form. Shoenburness is one of the stations where enteric fever appears to occur year after year, and in 1890 four cases reported there were attributed to eating shell-fish taken from beds contaminated by sewage.

THE FIGHTING RACES OF INDIA.

This useful little book, published in Calcutta by Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., is by Mr. P. D. Bonarjee, assistant in the Military Department in India, whose object has been to sketch the history, ethnology, customs and characteristics of the fighting races, in order to give the young British officer an idea of the material of which the native army is composed. In reality the book may be said to go further, for we have not yet exhausted our efforts in turning to military account the races under our control, and Mr. Bonarjee's book is full of excellent suggestions. His first chapter is devoted to the Pathan tribes, to which he ascribes a genius preponderatingly Afghan and not Indian. Of the Pathan as a soldier, he remarks that great dash characterises the race, but that a passionate nature never brought under control carries the man away, and that he is apt to lose his head in the heat and excitement of battle. Thus he is left at a disadvantage, as compared with cooler-headed, even if inferior, troops. In the British Service the Pathan, though often described as treacherous, has usually been a loyal and devoted soldier, and, though he is bloodthirsty, cruel, and revengeful, he has plenty of grit and nerve. Of the Baluchis, Mr. Bonarjee gives a better account. Manly, frank, brave, strong, inured to hardship, the Baluch is in many respects a fine type, and possesses greater regard for truth and civility than the Pathan. "The fighting instinct is keen in all these (Baluch) tribes, and they could all, except perhaps, the Khetran, supply excellent recruits for our native regiments, if they could only be got to enlist. Their predilections are for the close hand-to-hand fight with swords, the Bozdar tribe being the only one which has shown any liking for the matchlock of the Pathan." Mr. Bonarjee next surveys the qualities of the Punjabi Mahomedans, and has a great deal to say about the Sikhs, who, as soldiers, display quiet, cool, and resolute courage, and are less likely to lose their heads than the Pathans. "Taken as a whole, the Sikh is one of the finest types of man to be found in Asia." The Goorkhas form the subject of an interesting chapter, and the conclusion is that they are essentially a phlegmatic race, lacking in sentiment and emotion. The Goorkha, in a word, is cold and sluggish in temperament, but not the less, as has many a time been proved, capable of waking up to the stern business of war, and his warmth is the warmth of enthusiasm and not of excitability. He is a man full of hearty cheerfulness, possessed with a very real zest for life. Mr. Bonarjee's book also includes chapters on the Dogras, Jats, the aboriginal tribes, and certain fighting races of Southern India. There is also an excellent chapter upon the Rajputs. Altogether the book is exceedingly interesting and also very practically useful.

SOME MAGAZINES

The Nineteenth Century might be described as almost a naval and military number. Mr. Edmund Robertson is given the place of honour with an article upon submarine boats. Since his experience at the Admiralty he believes that the question has moved, and is haunted by the fear that we are likely to be caught napping again. He cites the various views expressed in the impartial Naval Annual, and quotes, though without acknowledgment, some things that have appeared in these columns. It is certainly eminently desirable that the Admiralty should look at this question from every point of view, and we hope they are doing so. It is quite possible to reconcile the fervid energy of the French for the submarine boat with the apathy which is displayed in this country. So far as can be seen, the submarine boat is the weapon of the weaker power standing upon the defensive, and what we want is not so much a submarine boat as a submarine boat destroyer. Mr. Goschen, indeed, has put this matter with some clearness before the House of Commons. Mr. Robertson is followed by Mr. Charles E. Lart, who discourses about the dearth of naval engineers. The facts he gives are sufficiently striking. He shows that in the Lucania, which makes short voyages of six days each, twenty-two engineer officers are thought necessary, while in the Terrible, which has vastly more complex machinery, there are only seven, and Mr. Lart asks how these men are to sustain all the hardships of a naval war, and from what source the gaps are to be filled. An interesting article is by Mr. Henry Birchenough, who describes what he calls the "Local Beginnings of Imperial Defence," and gives an example of what is being done by the Patriotic Association at Macclesfield, which proposes to introduce compulsory physical exercises and military drill in all elementary day schools in the district, to open public gymnasia, to form cadet corps and rifle corps, and to support Volunteer corps. The plan seems excellent, if it can be carried out. Colonel J. G. B. Stopford writes upon "The Volunteers and our Security," and offers a scheme for forming a reserve army of Volunteers. His suggestions are in detail, and must be referred to by those interested. "American Opinion of the War" occupies Mr. H. H. Bowen, who points out that the solid body of American opinion is in favour of this country—not so much perhaps upon sentimental as upon practical grounds. The United States, in a word, if we read his meaning aright, do not wish to see us upset until they are ready to take our place. There is a very downright article by Mr. W. A. Baillie-Grohman, that experienced marksman, who urges the great importance of true marksmanship, and has not much admiration for the Bisley type, and the prone position, which is now being abandoned.

The United Service Magazine does not bear a very strong impress of the war, though there is a great deal of interest in its pages. Col. F. N. Maude has an article of some length upon the evolution of cavalry, being mainly historical. He points out that the fighting efficiency of any army is the product, not the sum, of the efficiency of the three arms, and that cavalry is the one arm in which efficiency can compensate for marked inferiority in numbers. The essential conditions for success are full cognisance of what cavalry can accomplish, a complete knowledge of the means by which men can be trained for their work, and an iron resolution to compel accomplishment at every risk to personal popularity and reputation whether in peace or war. Major Telfer-Smollett offers a suggestion for a complete organisation of the British Army for war. The army corps system in South Africa proved inappropriate to our needs in the beginning of the war, but this writer proposes to divide the United Kingdom into six army corps district commands, the Thames District and the Channel Islands remaining as at present. The headquarters of these army corps would be Aldershot, Portsmouth, York, Dublin, London, and Chester. His scheme is given in complete detail. "Medicus" treats certain points in relation to the soldier in tropical climates. He is not altogether satisfied with the clothing, which he considers inadequate in quantity, and he does not like the shape of the military helmet. The tightness of the khaki tunic also is not to his taste. In regard to rations he says the quantity is ample, but not always well advised in quality. He advocates a compulsory supper at 8.30 or 9. There are two historical articles, on the "Battle of Tewkesbury," by Mr. H. E. Malden, and upon "New Orleans, 1815," by Capt. Charles Slack. Military readers will turn with interest to an article upon the defence of a flank, by Major Colin Mackenzie, Seaforth Highlanders. The only article relating to naval affairs is by Capt. W. Baker Brown, R.E. It is upon "Marines and Coaling Stations." He considers that the system of locating Marines at a few foreign stations only would give us the maximum of disadvantage without the advantages of Sir Drummond Jervois's larger scheme, and he thinks the seven years' experience at Esquimaux has gone far to prove the truth of his assertion. He hopes that the question of employing Marines in such situations may be considered as settled for a generation. We have not space to deal with Capt. Baker Brown's article in detail, but all who are interested in the question should turn to his pages.

We have also received the Badminton Magazine, the Genealogical Magazine, and the Antiquary.

OUR CAVALRY AND THE COLONIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Here is an extract from a letter written by my brother, who is now on a tour through New Zealand, Australia, and Tasmania. It will be of interest at the present moment:—"The people here are much more excited about the war than in the old country. I think they could keep 10,000 of the best cavalry in the world under training in the colonies at a trifling expense in peace time. I shall have more to say on this subject on my return, as I have been among the fellows who are available."

THE FATHER OF A C.I.V.

PRACTICAL MUSKETRY.

The competitions for the Daily Telegraph Cup and Dewar Trophy took place on Saturday last at Bisley and Pirbright. The weather was fine. The number of entries was naturally smaller than in previous years, but for the greater contest, in which teams of 16 in marching order have to march 10½ miles from Weybridge to Bisley in three hours, and there fire 16 volleys in 15 minutes at distances between 600 and 250 yards as they advance towards the targets, there were in all 28 teams entered, of which only one failed to put in an appearance. Lieut.-Gen. Moncrieff, the chief umpire, inspected the teams as they arrived at Bisley, in groups of seven at a time, between half-past 12 and 4, none appearing to be distressed by the march, and only one lost a few points from its target score for a little lateness in arrival.

In the seven previous competitions for the Daily Telegraph Cup, which is the chief prize, Guards battalions have had four wins and Volunteer teams three; and last year the 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards, now at the front, won with 162 points out of a possible 224. On Saturday the Grenadier Guards score was beaten by five points by the men of the London Scottish Rifles, under Lieut. Keys. The other prizes were taken by the Civil Service and Artists Rifles, who shared second honours, with 138 each; 3rd V.B. East Surrey Regiment, 128; Post Office Rifles, 123; Queen's Westminster Rifles, 122; London Rifle Brigade (winners in two former years), 116; 5th (West) Middlesex Rifles, 114; Victoria and St. George's Rifles, 113; and 1st Batn. Grenadier Guards, 111.

For the Dewar trophy, which in the only two previous competitions has been won by the Militia there were 30 teams entered, and Major-Gen. Hemming was chief umpire. The teams are of eight each, more lightly equipped than in the other contest, and two hours are allowed for the march from Guildford to Pirbright, where the teams fire individually and rapidly from the magazine at 200 and 500 yards, and by volleys at 800, with the possibility of making 728 hits. In the result the team of the London Rifle Brigade was first with 506, the next best records being the Hon. Artillery Company, 496; 6th Batn. Royal Fusiliers (City Militia), 475; 7th Batn. King's Royal Rifles (Barnet Militia), 474; 4th V.B. West Surrey, 458; 1st V.B. Royal Berkshire Regiment, 456; 21st Middlesex Rifles, 432; 2nd V.B. Royal West Surrey Regiment, 430; 3rd Batn. Scots Guards, 423; and 1st V.B. Royal West Surrey Regiment, 422.

The cups given by Major-Gen. Trotter for individual competition at 200 yards by members of the various teams were won, with 33 each, by Pte. Woolley, Civil Service Rifles, who is about to join as an officer the Army Post Office Corps in South Africa; and Qmr. Allen, 2nd V.B. West Surrey Regiment.

Lady Audrey Buller presented the prizes to the winners. She was thanked by the leaders of the winning teams, and made a brief reply, expressing especially her gratification at the cheers which had greeted mention of Sir Redvers Buller's names.

The hon. secretary of the Military Veterans' Association at Birmingham recently addressed a letter of inquiry to the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital with reference to an announcement that, owing to the direct intervention of the Queen, the conditions under which military veterans had hitherto been eligible for compassionate pensions had been somewhat relaxed. He has now received a reply from the Commissioners, to the effect that the special compassionate campaign pensions, hitherto restricted to soldiers of 10 years' service, may be given to necessitous men who have received war medals for any campaign and who are 65 years of age. Steps are being taken to secure the benefit of this relaxation for military veterans in Birmingham and the district who were previously ineligible.

THE NAVY IN LONDON.

ON Monday London did itself justice. It displayed an enthusiasm such as has seldom been equalled and never excelled. The occasion was worthy of the exhibition and demonstration of public sentiment. The march through the streets of London of a representative body of her Majesty's forces is at all times looked upon by the public as an appropriate opportunity for expressing its patriotism and its pride in the country's defenders. But the fact that the representatives of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines who received this welcome were the men who had played such a prominent part in the struggle in South Africa was an additional incentive, and quite explains the extraordinary outburst of public feeling which amazed many and pleased everyone. After all there was no real cause for surprise. Twice recently the public has shown itself to be strongly moved when its heart is touched. The manifestations made when the news of the relief of Ladysmith was received, and again when the news of the visit of the Metropolis, were proofs of the keen interest taken in the war and the depths of loyalty and patriotism which have been stirred by its incidents. The honour paid on Monday to the seamen and marines from Ladysmith, and to the men of Methuen's column, was no doubt largely a personal tribute to the gallantry and devotion of the men themselves; but it was also a recognition of the circumstance that their presence in London betokened a relief of that tension which is caused by the ill-success which characterised the early portion of the campaign. Then, too, nothing must be granted, perhaps, to the fact that the men who received such a hearty greeting belonged to the Sea Service. The Navy is not frequently represented in London, and London, as represented by the crowds which thronged the streets this week, does not often get the chance of visiting the seaports. Those who recollect the cheers which greeted the seamen in the Jubilee procession could need no further evidence of the appreciation in which the seamen are held by their countrymen; but the enthusiasm exhibited on Monday meant something more. It demonstrated the public approval of the meritorious actions of its naval heroes, and sympathetic approbation of that characteristic handiness which had enabled them to so usefully intervene at a critical stage of the operations in Natal. More than this, too, it may be said that in the persons of these seamen and Marines the British public in the capital was put in touch with the realities of the war. It was face to face with the very men who had suffered privations with Sir George White, who had manfully breasted the kopjes at Graspan, and, more memorable still, had handled that marvellous weapon, "the four point seven," which had knocked the Boer artillery out of time. It may, indeed, be said that if there was one thing missing to the whole-souled enjoyment of the Londoners in the spectacle presented to them it was the absence of that remarkable piece of ordnance which they appear to have exalted into something like the position of a fetish, and which they are to have an opportunity of worshipping, Captain Scott's mounting and all, at the Naval and Military Tournament at Islington.

There is another aspect in which this enthusiastic reception of the Ladysmith heroes should be regarded. It is not sufficient that it should be true of the public that "they all love Jack." What is so necessary is that they should thoroughly understand and appreciate the part that Jack plays in the protection of their interests. "It is the business of the Navy," said Blake, "to prevent foreigners from fooling us," and it is to be noted that he did not qualify in any way, or limit the prevention of which he judged the Navy to be capable. Lord Salisbury appears to be of another opinion, and it is to be feared that his address to the Primrose League on Wednesday may have a misleading tendency for this reason. The Prime Minister expressed his belief that the Navy will suffice for the protection of these shores, and yet he contemplates the provision of an alternative means of defence. He does not appear to have yet realised that if the Navy is an insufficient barrier to the "great wave," which he pictures as possibly dashing upon our shores, not the whole nation in arms could hope to stem it. We hope, with Lord Salisbury, that the new Imperial sentiment, and the patriotic instincts stimulated by the war, will result in a determination on the part of the people to "place the means of learning the handling of rifles within the reach of every man's home." But we do not think it necessary that the people of this country should be able to practise rifle shooting in order to provide a force as a bulwark against invasion. It is in order that we may be able to draw from the immense reserves of trained soldiers thus created those volunteers for active service abroad which are required for the defensive-offensive operations on land, the natural complement to the work which the Navy performs in keeping the ocean pathways free from foes. Mr. Goschen who has spoken more than once this week, and to much purpose, is under no such misapprehension as to the true purpose of the Navy. He is as anxious as anyone that while the country should give of its honours and gratitude bounteously to the naval heroes, yet the useful work they have done should not obscure the far more important rôle filled by the Fleet in connection with the war. The deeds of Captain Lambton and his brother seamen were grand. The resource and ability displayed by Captain Scott and his assistants were brilliant. But in neither case would the opportunity have been given had not the nation a few years ago insisted upon the provision of an all-powerful Navy. And the same spirit which inspired the public then is alive now, or would be speedily quickened if the impression became general that the Government are not doing its best to place the naval preparations of the country on an adequate level.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE WAR.

IT would easily be possible to make too much of the pro-Boer agitation in the United States. Perhaps it is not unnatural that our American cousins should feel some sympathy with a people who are struggling for independence. But the solid sense of the intelligent classes in the United States is mostly on our side, and the sentiment expressed by Mr. Brice, the Abdiel of the New York Board of Aldermen, who have decided to welcome the Boer delegates, expresses a feeling that is widespread among Americans. "We ought," he said, "to sympathise with England, which stood by us in Manila Bay when Germany and the rest of the whole world wanted to pound us." That sentiment has been expressed more than once by Admiral Dewey, and on the last occasion quite recently, when the Canadians invited him to a reception to be given in his honour at Port Stanley, he said: "We are of the same blood, with but slight difference between us, and the one man who stood at my back during the trying days of Manila was an Englishman. But for his support and the moral courage he inspired, I do not know what would have happened." The New York Herald remarks with truth that the moral support rendered by the British commander to Admiral Dewey was given on a broader scale by the British Cabinet.

President McKinley, to his credit, has announced that he will not receive the Boer delegates, and we wonder what the New York municipality would have thought if the Lord Mayor of London had agreed to welcome enthusiastically Philippine delegates while the fighting was going on in the islands. It cannot be said that the city fathers of New York are at all tactful when they meddle with international politics. They made sad blunders over the Dewey Day celebrations. When the gallant admiral was about to set foot on his native shore they actually invited the ambassadors and ministers of other nations to unite in a fête which was practically to celebrate the humiliation of a Power with which their countries were on friendly terms. The city of Chicago has surpassed the men of New York by inviting the Duke of Arcos, the Spanish Minister at Washington, to celebrate in their city the battle of Manila Bay. If this sort of thing goes on, says the Army and Navy Journal, someone must move the appointment of a committee on international etiquette, to revise all such invitations before they are sent out, otherwise the American nation will become the target for the ridicule of other Powers.

Unfortunately, the agitation against England is being worked by the Silverites, who, in their zeal for the cause of Mr. Bryan, do not hesitate to stir up international animosity in their efforts to disgrace President McKinley. A truer understanding of essentials is found in an article in the Nineteenth Century by an American citizen, Mr. H. H. Bowen. Those who can see far enough, he says, know very well that the prevalent influence of England, with its inevitable consequences of the heredity of the English-speaking race, must be for the benefit of the race at large; that wherever she has gone, industrial and human interest are growing and ripening for all races; and that wherever she has acquired a dominating influence the benefits to humanity are manifest. Practical interests are also concerned, and Captain Mahan, argues cogently in Thursday's Independent that the war being a purely European affair, any interference on the part of the United States would weaken the American defence of the Monroe Doctrine. We believe that this will be the view entertained by enlightened and far-seeing American citizens.

Navv Notes.

The Southampton Board of Guardians, we understand, is about to appeal to the Admiralty to station a training-ship for boys in Southampton Water, and will further suggest that the age for entry be reduced to fourteen. There is very little probability that either of these requests will meet with the approval of the Admiralty. The existing number of training-ships is sufficient to feed the Navy with seamen, and the only argument in favour of increasing the number is that the vessels are often overcrowded. It is very difficult to convince the public that recruiting for the Navy, and especially for the seaman branch, is almost always brisk. The chronic difficulty of raising troops may be responsible for this misunderstanding. At least three out of every ten boys who apply for admission to the training-ships are rejected by the medical officers, and many more candidates are disqualified before reaching even that stage. It is frequently urged by boards of guardians that lads of thirteen to fourteen years of age would apply to join the Navy if permitted to do so. They say further that having to wait a couple of years for admission, after leaving the board schools, deters a great number from going to sea in the Navy. Probably this is quite true, but since the Admiralty can obtain more boys than are needed, it is impossible to override the usual conditions of supply and demand. And, just in the same way, boys of thirteen to fourteen are not wanted in the mercantile marine. In this connection we notice a letter from an Irish lady suggesting the establishment of a boys' training ship in Dublin harbour. She estimates that hundreds of lads could be recruited in that district, and believes in the usual fallacy that the Admiralty are short of seamen.

The figures which Lieutenant Carlyon Bellairs gave in a letter to this journal last week appear to be very capably estimated, and he is quite successful in showing that a great increase of British shipping tonnage would be required to carry on the amount of seaborne commerce that now passes through the Suez Canal en route to the East. Hence, it is very obvious that the resources of Cape Town would be utterly inadequate to grapple with the increase of trade that would result from the blockage of the Canal and adoption of the Cape route. The commercial obstacles in the way of adopting the longer route in time of war are very serious, and have not, we think, been over coloured by Lieutenant Bellairs. He has previously written on this subject, chiefly with the object of proving that the Canal must be kept open. From the commercial aspect that is, no doubt, almost imperative; but since some Naval experts, such as Lord C. Beresford, doubt the possibility of keeping open the Canal, it is surely desirable that the Admiralty and the shipping companies should be prepared to adopt the Cape route if the worst comes to the worst. For this neither the Admiralty nor the companies are prepared in the slightest degree. The coaling stations are too scattered and ill-stocked with fuel, and the steamers built for the direct route are incapable of steaming the distances between the Cape route coaling ports. Even at Ascension Island and St. Helena the stock of coal is always so small that there is barely enough margin to supply a few unexpected vessels. As for Cape Town, this war has proved its defects as a shipping port. But these would soon be overcome if once the Canal were blocked. Yet not soon enough to secure the coaling, docking, &c., of the thousands of vessels that would call at the old posting-house of our sailing days. Apart from the commercial aspects, which can hardly be ignored, we should have less difficulty in protecting the Cape route than in guarding the narrow seas. Such, at least, is the view of some expert writers.

According to the Daily Chronicle, a British company is being formed, or has already been partially formed, the raison d'être of which is the failure of this country to produce armour plates with the rapidity needed for the growth of the Navy. The undertaking is said to be planned on a vast scale, and a commission of engineering experts is leaving for the States to examine into the American systems of construction of guns, armour, and machinery. No very convincing details of the scheme have been published, but there is so obviously a demand for a great armour-plate factory in this country that the story sounds very probable. The Admiralty would be obliged to give extensive and continuous orders to any British company capable of keeping pace with the building of battleships and cruisers. Hence there should be large profits in this scheme, and no difficulty in floating a wealthy company.

By the recent retirement of Captain W. Osborne Moore, the surveying branch of the Navy loses one of its most experienced and capable officers. With scarcely a break, Captain Moore has been engaged in various marine surveys since he was a sub-lieutenant, and he has commanded surveying ships as lieutenant, commander, and captain in many parts of the world. Some of his best work was done as commander of the Rambler on the China station about ten years ago, when he and his officers surveyed the Chusan Archipelago, the approaches to Shanghai, and carried out a great quantity of surveying between Hong Kong and Shanghai. As captain of the Research, Captain Moore has displayed all his old zeal and energy, but having lost all hope of obtaining the post to which his arduous services seemed to entitle him, the gallant officer has now retired voluntarily at the age of fifty-two. He will be long remembered in the surveying branch as a typical disciple of Belcher, the indefatigable explorer.

The fifth annual general meeting of the Navy League will be held at the Royal United Service Institution on Wednesday, the 23rd inst., at 3 p.m.

A Parliamentary paper recently issued contains particulars of the sight test in use in the mercantile marine for the year ended December 31, 1899. There are three tables, the first containing details of each case of failure reported, the second showing the percentage of failures in form vision and in colour vision to the total numbers examined, and the third giving the nature of the defect in each case of reported colour blindness. Of the twenty-one candidates who failed in form vision during 1899, none were re-examined, while of the forty-three who failed in colour vision thirteen were re-examined on appeal, and of these four passed and nine were rejected. Of the candidates who had failed during the previous year, 1898, one was re-examined in form vision, but again failed. The number of officers already in possession of certificates who, on coming up for examination in the year 1899, failed to pass the sight tests was three; one first mate, and two second mates failing in colour vision.

Navv Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh has promised to preside at the annual dinner of the Royal Marine Forces, on the 7th prox., in the Grand Hotel.

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., A.D.C., Admiral Lord Walter Kerr, and Rear-Admirals A. L. Douglas, A. K. Wilson, V.C., and A. W. Moore, Naval Lords of the Admiralty; Vice-Admiral Sir H. F. Stephenson; Major-General J. I. Morris, D.A.G. Royal Marine Forces; and Captain H.S.H. Prince Louis of Battenberg, were present at the luncheon given at the Admiralty by the First Lord on Tuesday to the captain and officers of the Powerful's Naval brigade.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, accompanied by his staff, was present at the church of St. George, Corfu, on Sunday last, the anniversary of the name-day of the King of Greece. His Majesty and his Royal Consort attended the "Te Deum" in celebration of the event.

Rear-Admiral A. W. Moore, Junior Naval Lord, will, we believe, relinquish his portfolio at the Admiralty in November next to relieve Rear-Admiral H. L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian station.

Rear-Admiral A. B. Jenkins' long connection with the Ordnance Committee eminently fits him for the post of second in command of the Channel Fleet, and brings him in practical contact with the requirements of the Service afloat. After completing a year in his new appointment, a place may be found for him where his scientific ability would prove highly advantageous.

Rear-Admiral Atwell T. Lake, senior officer on the coast of Ireland, has so largely obtained the goodwill of the local authorities at Queenstown as to induce the Cork Board of Guardians to ask the Admiralty to extend the gallant flag-officer's period of command. That worthy body of citizens, however, overlook the number of officers desirous of hoisting their flags, and the comparatively small amount of patronage in their lordships' gift.

Rear-Admiral W. H. Henderson, recently promoted from Commodore at Jamaica, was the guest of the Loyal Legion at New York last week, and spoke in support of friendship and sympathy between the United States and Great Britain. After paying a tribute to the importance of the colleges for instructing officers of both arms of the American services, the gallant flag-officer remarked that if the interests of the Old and the New countries were mutually identified they would do more in behalf of humanity than any other power or combination of states or nations.

Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd will, we are sure, be accorded the sympathy of the Naval Service in the loss of his son, Midshipman L. G. Rodney Lloyd, of the Doris, who died of enteric fever at Kimberley on the 28th ult. It is a most melancholy event so soon after Rear-Admiral Lloyd's return from Malta, where he had ably administered the Naval establishment during the past three years.

Rear-Admiral E. Neville-Rolfe arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last in the P. and O. steamship Malta, after a round of visits to Mediterranean ports during the winter.

Vice-Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge will probably relieve Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, in command of the Channel Squadron, in December next, now that the appointment to the Naval Reserve has fallen to Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel.

Captain Anson Schomberg, in the Victorious, arrived at Malta on Sunday last from Port Said. The vessel was placed in quarantine in consequence of cases of plague at the latter port. It should not materially delay her paying off and transferring her crew to the Revenge.

Captain G. H. Cherry commissioned the Argonaut at Chatham on the 19th ult., but his departure for China has been delayed by the unsatisfactory working of the propelling machinery.

Captain F. E. E. Brock, of the Highflyer, like his brother-captain of the Argonaut, is unable to proceed to his station to relieve the Eclipse in consequence of machinery defects in the cruiser he commands, which will probably delay him until the end of this month.

Captain E. J. Fleet, of the Edgar, continued his homeward voyage from Colombo on Sunday last with relieved crews from China.

Captain William Wilson, who recently paid off the Anson, relieves Captain C. R. Arbuthnot on the 1st prox., the latter officer having served upwards of two years in command on Channel fleet service.

Captain H. N. Dadding, of the Iphigenia, arrived at Malta on Tuesday on his way to Portsmouth to pay off his ship.

Captain F. O. Pike, of the Minerva, was able to leave Plymouth on Tuesday last, with four torpedo-boat destroyers under his care, for Malta.

Commander F. F. Haworth-Booth, promoted from command of the Redpole in China, and Midshipman G. C. Heathcote, invalided, from the Victorious, arrived at Plymouth on Monday last by the P. and O. steamship Parramatta. The latter officer was admitted to the Royal Naval Hospital.

Lieut.-Commander Marcus R. Hill commissioned the Redbreast at Haulbowline on March 19 last, and left that yard on Monday in this week for the East Indies to relieve the Lapwing. This is the first occasion of a vessel being refitted and the pennant hoisted in her for foreign service at the Queenstown Naval Establishment.

Lieutenant A. E. H. Marescaux left Southampton on Saturday last in the Union Castle steamship Norham Castle for the Cape to join the surveying vessel Rambler as second in command.

Lieutenant Viscount Kelburne has, we are glad to say, recovered from the serious illness he unfortunately acquired last autumn while serving in the Ramillies, and which caused considerable anxiety to his gallant and distinguished father, the Earl of Glasgow, as well as his numerous naval friends. The latter will, undoubtedly, be glad to see his lordship's appointment to the Royal yacht Osborne.

Chaplain and Naval Instructor Rev. W. E. Smith is given the Greenwich Hospital Pension vacant by the death of the Rev. S. H. Jacob.

Fleet-Paymaster W. J. Kilroy, who was invalided from the Empress of India in August last, at Malta, has been placed on the retired list, being unfit for further active service.

Paymaster W. B. Penny, serving with the senior Naval officer at Durban, has proceeded to Bloemfontein to join the Naval Brigade attached to Field-Marshal Lord Roberts's force.

Majors J. H. Swanton, temporarily attached to the staff of the Western District, W. S. S. Harvest, and E. S. D. Crowther, Instructor of Gunnery, all of the Plymouth Division, R.M.L.I., left last week for Aldershot to attend the tactical examination for field command.

Captain H. J. C. Gibsons, R.M.L.I., retired, was gazetted on Friday last to a company in the Royal Home Counties Reserve Regiment. He retired in 1897, having previously obtained an extra certificate in musketry at Hythe.

Captains E. J. Stroud and L. W. Miller, and Lieutenant H. J. H. Dawson, R.M.L.I., have gone to Hythe for a musketry course.

Lieutenant G. F. Muller, R.M.L.I., becomes Assistant-Instructor of Gunnery, Plymouth Division, in place of Captain F. J. W. Harvey, who temporarily retained the appointment after promotion therefrom.

THE LADYSMITH BRIGADE.

The Admiralty inspection of the men of the Powerful who had served at Ladysmith and at Graspan, and their welcome home by the citizens of London, took place on Monday. The weather was all that could be desired for the occasion, a bright sunshine following on the showers of the preceding night which had helped to lay the dust. From the moment the men of the brigade reached Victoria at 10.35 until they entrained again at London Bridge for Portsmouth, the arrangements were followed without a hitch. The decorations in the streets on the line of route were such as are quite unusual. Some of the inscriptions are worth quoting. "Bravo, the Handy Men," "Four-point-seven, London is proud of you," "Handy and Ready, Good as in the Old Times," "England's Pride, Her Sailor Heroes," and a truly imposing one of three lines read "Ladysmith Siege 118 Days, England Expects that Every Man will Do His Duty, You Have Done It." Of the officers, Capt. Lambton, Commander Ogilvy, and Lieut. Heneage were mounted, while the men had brought with them a 12pr. and two of the Maxims which had been used on shore, and were painted the now familiar khaki. As they passed down down Victoria Street and up Whitehall to the Horseguard's Parade, the continuous waves of cheers which greeted them must have aroused proud emotions in their hearts. It was difficult to believe that these splendid men in the pink of health could have gone through the vicissitudes experienced in the now historic siege. A prettier picture than that presented on the Parade Ground when the brigade had arrived has seldom been seen. The stands which had been erected on two sides of the square were full of brightly dressed people, and on the other two sides the Guards in close order had enough to do to keep back the crowds of people forming a background with the trees and foliage of the park. It was as much as the line of Household Cavalry and mounted police could do to withstand the pressure of the assembled thousands. As the brigade entered the parade ground the cheers of the public were again and again renewed as the men drew up in lines facing the new Admiralty building, the Marines on the left and the guns in the rear. Here they piled arms for a time in order to obtain some much needed refreshment. Half an hour later and they again stood to their arms just before the Princess of Wales and Princess Victoria of Wales and Admiral Sir H. Stephenson arrived. A few minutes later the Prince of Wales came on to the parade ground from the gardens of the Admiralty wearing the uniform of an Admiral of the Fleet. He was accompanied by Mr. Goschen and the other Lords of the Admiralty. The inspection of the brigade began at once, the Prince passing up and down the lines of men which extended nearly across the parade. Then, returning to the saluting point, the brigade took up a formation in quarter column on the leading company with the guns in advance and wheeled into position for the march past. His Royal Highness, at the request of the Lords of the Admiralty, took the salute. After the march past the men advanced in review order, and then formed up on three sides of a square, the officers being ordered to the front where they were presented each in turn, and to each the Prince said a few words. Mr. Goschen then addressed the brigade:—

"Captain Lambton, officers and men of the Royal Naval Brigades,—In the name of the Board of Admiralty I welcome you home, and congratulate you on your fine appearance. You look fit and smart. No one to look at you would believe that many of you had been more than two years in China before you suffered the privations of Ladysmith or marched and fought near the Modder River. You have come back to your country with the sense that you have done your duty as became the representatives of the Royal Navy called on to fight on shore. You have not only had your baptism of fire; you have, most of you, been under fire for months by night and by day, and maybe it will be long before the echo of the boom of big guns ceases to ring in your ears. With your comrades in other forces of the Queen, by the defence and relief of Ladysmith, you have saved the country from such a disaster as has never befallen British arms. The defence and relief of Ladysmith will never be forgotten in British story. But you came back with gaps in your ranks, dear shipmates left behind in honoured graves. You of the Powerful lost your young and gallant commander, Ethelston, and Lieut. Egerton, your gunnery lieutenant, to whose careful and eager training you owe so much of that fine shooting which has been the admiration of the Army at whose side you fought—an officer whom the nation could ill spare. And one word to the Marines. We have heard of your gallantry when, at Graspan, Major Plumbe fell mortally wounded, and how you dashed to the top of the kopje undaunted by the terrible sight of your comrades falling in heaps around you as you made for victory. I am proud to stand here and address such a body of men as we have inspected to-day. You have nobly upheld the traditions of the Service. You are proud of those who have gone before you, and, in their turn, your sons, if you have them, or when you have them, will be proud of you."

The Prince of Wales also spoke as follows:—

"Capt. Lambton, officers, and men of the Naval Brigade from her Majesty's ship Powerful,—I am glad to associate myself in the fullest manner with the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty in welcoming you home. I congratulate you all upon your appearance and smartness after all the arduous duties you have been called upon to perform. You helped in a most gallant manner to defend Ladysmith during a prolonged and trying siege; and I am glad to think the Navy has been of such great assistance to the Army during the present campaign. I do not think I need add more after what the First Lord of the Admiralty has said except to endorse his words. Let me again express the happiness it has given me to see you here to-day."

The inspection concluded, refreshments were served to the men in the new Admiralty buildings, four rooms being set apart for the petty officers, blue-jackets, and marines, and during the entertainment the Prince and Princess of Wales visited the room. Captain Lambton and the other officers lunched with the First Lord, the Royal party and a distinguished company being also present. At half past three the procession resumed its march, being greeted in Trafalgar Square by perhaps the largest, and certainly the most enthusiastic assemblage ever gathered there. The Embankment, too, was so densely crowded that the mounted police with difficulty cleared a path. At the western end of Queen Victoria Street so dense was the mob that at one time it actually broke into the procession for the purpose of relieving the seamen at the drag ropes of the guns. But everywhere along the route it was simply packed with people. The decorations also, which were innumerable, were for the most part appropriate, and in any case produced a gay and cheerful effect. On arriving at the Royal Exchange the men piled arms in the building, and were then entertained in the reading-room which had been fitted for the occasion as a banqueting hall. When full justice had been done to the very substantial meal which Lloyd's had provided, Mr. Beauchamp, addressing the officers and men, expressed the pleasure it gave the members of Lloyd's to welcome them in that room, to congratulate them on their return, and to assure them how much their services to the country had been appreciated. Lloyd's had watched the career of the Naval Brigade with pride and pleasure, knowing that it would not fail to do as it always had in whatever part of the world its services had been required. There had occasionally been a feeling of despondency, fearing that the defending force had been asked to do an almost impossible task, and he would leave them to judge of the joy with which the announcement of the relief of Ladysmith had been received in that house. He greeted them not only for what they had done, but as the representatives of that force which was a symbol of England's power and strength.

The National Anthem having been sung, Capt. Lambton, premising that they had only two minutes to spare, thanked the representatives of Lloyd's for the magnificent reception which had been accorded the Naval Brigade. He would also like to express their acknowledgments to the people of London who had that day given them such a glorious welcome in the streets of the metropolis. They knew it signified the people's appreciation of the Royal Navy.

Before leaving, Captain Lambton was presented with a gold cigarette case, the other officers with silver ones, and the men with silver tobacco boxes, each souvenir bearing the Lloyd's coat of arms and the date of the presentation. At half-past six the men entrained for Portsmouth.

Navy Foreign.

Now that the submergible boat is so much under discussion, it is interesting to know that the Morse is commissioned, and that she makes periodical trips for the training of the men and the testing of the boat. The Morse is a purely harbour-defence boat, and cannot go beyond the limits of the Cherbourg roadstead without difficulty and danger. The French have now in hand, in addition to the Narval, which is still under trial, six submergible boats, the Français, Algérien, Korrigan, Farfadet, Gnome, and Lutin, and two improved Narvals are about to be put in hand, thus showing the great want of confidence that is felt in the value of the fleet as a means of defence. A writer in the Yacht points out that the submergible boat is an arm for daylight employment and for fine weather. If in the submerged state the boat escapes the troubles of the surface, she must always rise before going into action, in order to take bearings, and unless the water is smooth her range of vision is restricted, and the optic tube is of uncertain value. The writer in the Yacht is, however, convinced of the value of these boats, and says that nothing can prevent them from issuing from the harbours and awaiting the approach of the enemy. A certain time must elapse before the working of the boats can be regarded as certain, but, in the course of two or three years, France will have a number of these engines afloat, in addition to 300 torpedo-boats of all kinds. A sensible remark concludes the article. It is that more must not be asked of the submergible boat than it can accomplish, which there seems to be a certain tendency to do in France. It is to be hoped that the British Admiralty will be able to withstand the pressure now being put upon them by interested persons to waste the public money in similar freaks.

We referred last week to the changes introduced in the Rue Royale by the appointment of Vice-Admiral Bienaimé as chief of the French Naval Staff. It does not appear that the change is organic, but it is regarded by M. Marc Landry as fundamental in its character. There must be no confusion, he says, between the past and the present, and the name of chief of the staff should be changed. Formerly this officer was the coadjutor of the Minister, and his functions were those of a sub-Minister. But when the Minister created the Civil Cabinet, leaving to the chief of the staff the direction of the Cabinet Militaire, he removed from him a part of the functions which had formerly been attributed to him. A further step was taken when the operations of the French Admiralty were divided into the direction of the fleet constructed and the fleet in hand or to be constructed. Through these changes the chief of the staff became a departmental officer, and although the appointment of Admiral Bienaimé is welcomed, it confirms in a stronger way the departmental character of the functions. M. Landry argues that it is necessary, as a corrective or complement, to appoint a Director-General of the material, and to place a Naval officer at the head of the Minister's Cabinet, preferably a rear-admiral, for it is very singular, he says, that the lieutenant of a civilian Minister should be himself a civilian, altogether incompetent in naval affairs. Apparently things are working round in France to a partial copy of our Admiralty Board, the chief of the staff having largely the functions of the First Sea Lord in relation to preparation for war, while the coming functionary suggested is no other than our Controller.

The French armoured cruiser Dupleix has been launched at Rochefort. She is one of three vessels of the smaller class, displacing 7,700 tons. These cruisers were designed at the same time as the Montcalm class (9,517 tons), from which the Comde class (10,000 tons) has been developed, as well as the somewhat larger Amiral Aube, and the projected cruisers of 12,416 tons. The Dupleix, like the others, was designed by M. Bertin. She is 426ft. 6in. long, with 58ft. 4in. beam and 24ft. 4in. draught, and is protected by side armour 4in. thick with a 3in. deck. The armament consists of ten 6.4in., ten 1.8in., and six 1.4in. quick-firers. The cruiser has twenty-four Belleville boilers, intended to give a speed of twenty-one knots. There are three propellers, and the normal coal supply is 880 tons.

THE PRINCIPLE OF ARMY LEAGUES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The present war has evoked innumerable criticisms, many of them of a most conflicting nature, upon our Army and its administration. As a consequence of a desire to give organised expression to such criticisms, one Army League has been formed, another is impending, and very possibly two or three more similar bodies may be floated. Since the times are very critical, since the vital importance of the reform of the Army, and more especially the reform of the administration of the Army by the War Office, are now generally recognised, and since misdirected effort to procure these reforms means failure, it seems eminently desirable that some attempt should be made to analyse the principles upon which Army Leagues should proceed, in order that, for this once at least in the history of Britain, theory should go before practice, and thought precede action.

What, then, are the objects of an Army League, and who decides what these objects should be? The objects vary with the views of the private individuals who create it and compose it, and these individuals are responsible for them. If, for instance, a majority favour Militia ballot as a remedy for a portion of our military ills, then Militia ballot will figure in the programme, and the Volunteer movement will, perhaps, be declared mistaken. If a contrary view should prevail amongst the majority, a contrary view will be put forth to the world as the goal and aim to which public effort should be directed.

There are, unfortunately, two obvious difficulties under which such critics must labour. The first is that their views and recommendations may be traversed by those other private individuals whose qualifications may conceivably be as good as their own; and the second is that, whether right or wrong, they are practically unable to carry their conclusions into effect. The means open to them are the dissemination of literature, the Press, so far as they can reach it, the platform, and the occasional help of private members of Parliament. But the first three of these methods are educative alone, and the last is somewhat feeble, because, as no weight of probable correctness attaches to the proposals of an amateur organisation, the Government have only to reply that their official information leads them to think the advice tendered them erroneous to practically dispose of it in the eyes of the country. The educative effect, again, may be valuable, but it is distant and indirect. After twenty years of ceaseless and successful endeavour, it may be that men then in power will have learnt that the duty which they owe to country is higher than that owed to party; but in the meantime the ties of party will retain their strength, and the British Empire will continue to be involved in the stream of mighty events. When Parliament meets each year nothing will be heard of the proposals of an Army League. They will not be brought formally before the House of Commons. They will be heard of, if at all, piecemeal, through the futile effort of a few individuals whose opinions other individuals will oppose.

But how immensely different would the situation be if the person proposing the reforms needed to give military efficiency to the British Empire were the one man officially regarded as the most competent in that Empire to give advice—if, in other words, he were "the Commander-in-Chief." In that case, whether Parliament decided to adopt or decided to reject the measures which he advocated, they would at least command universal attention, and the nation would at last know where, in the opinion of the man incomparably the best fitted to judge, its real needs lay. For the Commander-in-Chief is the head of the whole military hierarchy

He is the apex of the pyramid of information which every unit under his command is bound to supply at his request. No Army League has, or can have, at its disposal, in the nature of things, the tenth part of the knowledge possessed by the Commander-in-Chief. If then, this man, who in his own person sums up that Army which defends the Empire, were required annually to produce a Memorandum stating what are in his opinion its military needs, and if this paper were laid by the Secretary of State for War on the table of the House of Commons for criticism and discussion, all that the most ardent reformer could desire would be in the way to be attained. For if then the Ministry of the day declared the expense involved too great, every man who desired the execution of the programme of the competent authority would have such a theme for agitation as could never otherwise be his. Where the irresponsible proposals of an unofficial organisation could carry but the most trifling weight, the responsible utterance of the responsible man could not fail to carry widespread conviction. If, say, for four years past this plan had been followed, either the defects revealed in the Army would not now have existed, or the present Commander-in-Chief would have stood condemned before the world.

But as things are, and will continue to be unless this vital reform be adopted, no such responsibility attaches either to him or to any other human being. It is at present the task of Lord Lansdowne to consult both Lord Wolseley and as many other officers or civilian officials as he chooses, or none of them, and then to draw up his own scheme for the defence of the Empire according to his own ideas. That a civilian Secretary of State for War is entirely unfit to judge the merits of rival military projects, he would doubtless himself be the first to admit. Where, then, is the guarantee to the Empire that the proposals for which he is nominally responsible, and which he each year submits to Parliament, represent the true opinions of his military advisers? But in practice there is another authority which hampers the action of the Secretary of State for War. For the Treasury, whose true function is that of guardian to the public treasure chest, tries to envelop all the public departments of the State more completely within its folds, and numberless instances can be cited in which the action of the Treasury has paralysed the efficiency of the Army. Therefore it is essential that the Memorandum by the Commander-in-Chief should be drawn up without having had first to go through the Treasury filter, and that the cost of carrying out its recommendations should then be calculated in the financial department of the War Office itself.

The War Emergency Committee has come to the conclusion that it can render no greater service to the public than by putting these facts before it, and by suggesting the amalgamation of all Army reform organisations now formed, or to be formed, upon the sole basis of concentrated effort in the required direction. The following resolution defining the object to be pursued was passed at the last meeting of the War Emergency Committee, held on the 3rd inst. :—

"To ensure that a Memorandum, stating what, in the opinion of the Commander-in-Chief, are the military needs of the Empire, shall be laid every year on the table of the House of Commons, the Treasury to have no previous cognizance thereof."

Any organisations, or any individuals, who would like to associate themselves with the War Emergency Committee, and to co-operate for the attainment of this object, are asked to communicate with the hon. secretaries, Mr. T. Mullett Ellis and Mr. H. F. Wyatt, at the address below.

WHAT IS TROPON?

WHAT IS TROPON?

TROPON is a natural pure albumen, prepared after the method of Professor Finkler, M.D., of the University of Bonn.
TROPON is the ESSENCE OF LIFE. It almost immediately relieves prostration and REVITALIZES THE ENTIRE SYSTEM.
TROPON is the only real food for the Healthy and Invalids, for Consumptives, and all suffering from Wasting Diseases, for those afflicted with Gout, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Albuminuria, &c.
TROPON is immediately absorbed and perfectly digested and transformed into blood and muscles. It is absolutely tasteless and odourless. It can be taken in its original form or as Tropo Biscuits, Tropo Rusks, or Tropo Chocolate.
TROPON is tolerated by even the weakest system.
TROPON is used in thousands of hospitals in Great Britain and abroad, and is prescribed by many thousands of doctors.

"THE TIMES," in its issue of September 5, says, under "Naval and Military Intelligence," referring to a report published in Kölnische Zeitung, with regard to an experiment made in the German Army with a new food for soldiers called "Tropon":—

"Twenty-five non-commissioned officers and men volunteered for the experiment, and were placed under the command of a lieutenant. Each man received three days' rations of Tropo rusks, Tropo chocolate, Tropo bean and pea soup. During three days the men were to march, in full marching order, thirty kilometres each day, and to sleep at night in the open air.
 "A Tropo ration for three days weighs 1,200 grammes, whereas the ordinary ration of solid food of the German soldier weighs 1,950 grammes. The Tropo ration is also cheaper in proportion to the amount of nourishment it contains. The men found the Tropo food easy of digestion, and it kept them in good condition."

Sold by all leading Chemists and Stores.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In reference to the unfortunate disaster that befel a riding party of four officers of the Guards from Bloemfontein on March 23, attention may be drawn to a similar tragedy that occurred to a shooting party of officers on November 13, 1847, during the Kaffir wars. The five officers of different regiments composing the party, among them being Lieut. Littlehales, 73rd, and Asst.-Surg. Loch, 7th Dragoon Guards, left the large camp of General Sir George Bakeney for a day's game shooting along the hills and kloofs of the west bank of the Great Kei River. As they went without leave their absence was not missed for some time, till Lieut. Littlehales turned up unexpectedly in the camp on foot in a battered condition, and reported the disaster that befel his comrades. A patrol was sent out from camp next morning to the site of the ambushade, and found the bodies of the four officers minus their horses and arms, much mutilated and wounded. There had been evidence of a desperate encounter at close quarters, and a couple of dead Kaffirs were also seen, but the attack had been made by a large body of them, who surrounded the party unexpectedly. Capt. Littlehales 73rd Regiment, survived till his death at home, March, 1892. The officers' bodies were removed to camp and buried with military honours in due course. "PATROL."

Caledonian United Service Club, Edinburgh.

The annual meeting of the Army Temperance Association will be held in the theatre of the Royal United Service Institution on Monday, May 14, at 3.45 p.m. Gen. Sir George White, V.C., G.C.B., will preside.

The Queen has by Royal warrant directed that the new regiment of Irish Guards shall be a "corps" for the purposes of the Army Act, and the schedule of the Royal warrant of January 28, 1899, is to be amended accordingly.

THE NATIONAL BAZAAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I am requested by Lord Arthur Hill, chairman of the General Committee, and the Countess of Bective, Chairman of the Ladies' Committee, to ask you to kindly open your columns for an appeal to the English people to help in our endeavours, by donations in money or kind for any of the seventy stalls (which will represent all the regiments at the front), at the forthcoming National Bazaar to be held on May 24, 25, and 26 next, in the Empress Rooms, Royal Palace Hotel, and adjoining grounds, the latter so generously placed at the disposal of the Committee by H.M. Board of Works.

They feel that there are many who would be most willing and desirous of assisting in the undertaking which the Committee have in view—namely, raising not less than £50,000, for the relief of the many sufferers in the present war—the sum so realised being presented as a birthday offering to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, for her personal directions as to the distribution; but they may be awaiting the means of knowing how to do so. May I, therefore, beg that you insert this letter, and thus convey to them the knowledge that any donations will be gratefully received on this behalf by us at the offices of the National Bazaar, Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, W.

The Committees are also desirous that all wives of field officers in the various regiments should place themselves in communication with myself should they wish in any way to forward the movement by assisting at the stalls as vice-presidents.

ARTHUR J. COKE, Hon. Secretary.

The results are published of the competition for the musketry prizes presented by the Commander-in-Chief in India. The silver cup presented to the British Service has been won by the 1st Batn. Wiltshire Regiment, with a score of 539 points. The silver cup presented to the Native Army has been won by the 29th Punjab Infantry, with a score of 504 points. The Magdala gold medal presented to the best shot in the Native Army has been won by Havildar-Major Raghbinder Singh, 30th Madras Infantry, with a score of 95 points.

The hon. secretary of the Imperial War Fund informs us that grants to widows and orphans are temporarily suspended. The fund has, up to April 23, given out in South African grants £2,500 more than it has received. Out of the immense sums subscribed by the public only £5,300 has reached the Imperial War Fund. Over 200 widows' claims are now waiting settlement, and more are coming in at the rate of about ten a day, principally caused by deaths from enteric fever. These widows' claims will be filed, and will be dealt with as soon as fresh and sufficient funds have been received. It certainly would be a pity if this excellent organisation were to fall through. The good it has done has been incalculable, and its administration has been beyond praise.

THE WAR EMERGENCY COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the War Emergency Committee at the Carlton Hotel, Col. Sandys, M.P., in the chair, a resolution, proposed by Mr. H. F. Wyatt and seconded by the Rev. Poyntz Saunderson, was agreed to:—"That this committee shall form itself into an organisation having for its object to ensure that a memorandum stating what are the military needs of the Empire, in the opinion of the Commander-in-Chief, shall be laid every year on the table of the House of Commons, the Treasury to have no previous cognisance of this memorandum." It was also resolved, on the motion of Col. Keyser, seconded by Major-Gen. Dashwood, that a sub-committee be formed for the purpose of conferring with any other similar organisations with a view to co-operation on a common basis.

Her Majesty's Reserve Regiment of Hussars was formed at Hounslow yesterday, composed of a squadron each from the 10th, 13th, and 14th Hussars—a total of 594 of all ranks and 417 horses.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of
'303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready or transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,
weighs about 600 lbs.

THE MARCH TO KROONSTAD.

LORD ROBERTS entered Kroonstad on Saturday at the head of his victorious troops, the place of honour in the imposing military procession being assigned to his Colonial bodyguard. In occupying this important place, the point of junction of the Vier Fontein branch railway with the main line, and situated only fifty miles due south of the Transvaal frontier at Reitzburg, Lord Roberts has brought the second chapter in his triumphant campaign in the Orange State to a close. His progress from Bloemfontein to Kroonstad has presented a spectacle of uninterrupted success. The incidents marking his daily advance have been perhaps less stirring and dramatic than those that made the invasion of the Orange State so remarkable. But if there were no such brilliant achievements as the cavalry dash for the relief of Kimberley, the capture of Cronje, and the forced march of sixty miles across a waterless waste with horses and men over-wrought, and a commissariat strained to the utmost through the loss of 200 waggons, we have on the other hand beheld with admiration the masterly handling of columns, moving with the precision that comes of perfect control and discipline, and rendered mobile by effective organisation to a degree unprecedented in the British Army, with the result that the enemy, whose most formidable characteristic is his mobility, has at every point been out-mancœuvred, out-flanked, and forced into uninterrupted retreat from one strongly entrenched position to another, and with scarcely any appreciable loss on our side. The distance covered by the army since it left Karee Siding on the 3rd inst. until it defiled—in part—before Lord Roberts in the market-square of Kroonstad on Saturday was about one hundred miles. The first forty were traversed in four days, during which Brandfort, Smaldeel, and Winburg fell, and the passage of the Vet was forced. After a two days' rest at Smaldeel and Winburg the advance was resumed, the remaining sixty miles being marched in four days more, and a heavy engagement fought after crossing the Zand. This is a remarkable record of which both Lord Roberts and his brave troops may well be proud.

The Union Jack now flies over Kroonstad. Two-thirds of the Orange State has been conquered, the effective opposition of the enemy has been broken, and for the second time the ex-President has taken to flight, and has transferred to Heilbron, as his new capital, what little remains to him of government and authority. Possessed of more determination than his burghers, he is endeavouring to maintain for a little longer what is now a hopeless struggle. With the commandoes still in being at Vrede, Frankfort, Harrismith, and other places in the north-east of the State which the British have not yet entered, he may concentrate a force possibly at Bethlehem on Lord Roberts's right flank. The burghers who are retreating before General Brabant and Sir Leslie Rundle in the south-east may still further swell this force, and a repetition of operations similar to those of the last fortnight about Thaba N'chu may be attempted further north. But, there being now apparently an open breach between the Transvaalers and the Free Staters, Mr. Steyn's object in continuing in arms can only be to obtain, if possible, some terms less humiliating than unconditional surrender. He cannot any longer entertain any illusions as to the issue of the war and as to his powerlessness to stay the advance of the British army now in possession of his country.

The passage of the Zand River in force on the 10th inst. and the subsequent engagement were brilliant operations. A decisive victory was then gained with remarkably little loss. Both the tactics on the actual field of battle and the preceding strategy conducted to baffle and out-mancœuvre the Boers were, from all points of view, masterly. Two cavalry brigades under General French, pushing well to the left front, together with General Hutton's mounted infantry, crossed the river a few miles west of the railway, and thence in the face of a continued opposition worked round the enemy's right in a north-easterly direction. General Pole-Carew's division, with the headquarters, following the line of the railway, and flanked by a brigade of cavalry and mounted infantry, with artillery, passed over at the drift near the railway bridge. General Tucker's division was on the right making for Deelfontein Noord, eight miles east of the railway. About four miles further to the east marched the mobile column under General Ian Hamilton's command towards the cross roads near to Ventersburg. At dawn, under cover of heavy artillery fire, the columns passed to the north bank at their respective points, those selected for the centre and right being screened by the 2nd Batn. Cheshire and 1st Batn. Derbyshire Regiments, which had crossed during the night and entrenched themselves. The passage of the left and centre was almost unopposed, but Ian Hamilton on the right of the extended line met with determined resistance, and a vigorous attempt was made to turn his right. This, however, was successfully repulsed after some hours' fighting by Smith-Dorrien's brigade. The enemy's right wing was the first to give way, the ground to the west of the railway, where the British cavalry were thrown well forward, being unfavourable to prolonged defence. In the more broken and hilly country to the east the advance of Generals Tucker and Ian Hamilton gained ground less quickly against the Boer centre and left, but a well-executed turning movement round the left flank by the 21st Brigade, seconded by a frontal attack by the 19th Brigade, forced the enemy back. Towards the close of the action the 1st Batn. East Lancashire and the 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regiments, pressing gallantly forward with the City Imperial Volunteers, seized commanding ground, and the Boers abandoned their position precipitately before the British Infantry could reach them with the bayonet. The enemy, who had fought throughout the day with greatly diminished spirit, finally broke along their entire line, and fled from the field followed by the mounted troops in hot pursuit.

At daybreak on the 11th the army continued its forward march on a wide front of about twenty miles, and as evening fell Lord Roberts was twenty miles further on his way. The troops moving in several columns were disposed in the same order of march as on the previous days, but with the left rather more advanced owing to the openness of the country west of the railway. General French operating in that quarter succeeded in seizing a drift over the Valsch River in time to prevent the passage being opposed. The Headquarters with General Pole-Carew's Division followed the line of the railway, having General Tucker a short distance to the south-east, while still further to the east came General Ian Hamilton. Six miles to the north, and covering Kroonstad from the south, stretched the entrenched position of the Boers at Boschrand, where a determined stand was expected. Early on Saturday, however, when our advanced troops reached that point, the trenches were found to be tenantless, the enemy having abandoned them during the night. Lord Roberts accordingly pressed his columns forward on Kroonstad, and, meeting with no opposition, took formal possession of the place shortly after mid-day. The Boer defence had suddenly and unexpectedly collapsed. The Transvaalers—at feud with the Free Staters—had refused to fight again in the Orange State, and had retired towards the line of the Vaal with artillery and baggage, accompanied by their Generals, Botha and De Wet. With the occupation of Kroonstad, and the retirement beyond the Vaal of the Transvaal Boers, the opposition of the lesser of the two Republics has been practically overcome.

While the main army approached Kroonstad, an important movement, resulting in the re-occupation of Dundee and Glencoe, and the turning of the Biggarsberg range, was carried out by Sir Redvers Buller. Acting under orders to keep the enemy in northern Natal occupied, he marched, with the 2nd Division and Lord Dundonald's cavalry, towards Helpmakaar on the 11th inst., despatching Bethune's mounted force at the same time in the direction of Greytown, some sixty miles south-east, apparently to mislead the enemy. On Saturday the 5th Division moved out to the east from Elands-laagte and occupied Indoda Mountain, eleven miles distant, to cover and support General Buller's movement, while Bethune, changing his course to the north, made for Pomeroy. The enemy's position, lying a few miles south-west of Helpmakaar, was on Sunday assailed in front by Sir Redvers Buller's infantry, the cavalry simultaneously turning the right flank, and Bethune's force operating round the left and rear from Pomeroy. After a feeble resistance the Boers gave way, retiring on Helpmakaar, and during the night continued their flight to the north. As they went they fired the dry grass of the hills, thus adding greatly to the difficulties of the pursuit. Lord Dundonald on Monday, following up the enemy in the face of the heat and smoke, covered forty miles in an almost waterless country, a fine performance which called forth the well-deserved commendation of Sir Redvers Buller. On Tuesday Dundee and Glencoe, places rendered memorable by the fierce engagement fought there in the early days of the war by the late Sir Penn Symons, over whose grave the Union Jack now flies, were again occupied by the British. On Thursday Sir Redvers was at Dannhauser with his advanced patrols as far as Newcastle. The enemy, to the number of about 7,000, made good their retreat, some in the direction of Laing's Nek, and others towards the Transvaal border by way of De Jager's Drift on the Buffalo River. By this successful operation the formidable line of the Biggarsberg, entrenched with so much skill and care, was turned and rendered untenable, with but slight loss to the British. Mafeking, resolute, even cheerful, but very hungry, still awaits relief, so far as is officially known, though the air has been full of rumours that the happy event has actually taken place. On Saturday the place is stated to have been heavily assaulted, but without success. A flying column was reported from Pretoria to have reached Vryburg on the 9th, proceeding northwards by forced marches, but to have been checked and repulsed on Tuesday at Kraaipan, about thirty-six miles south of the town. Reports from Boer sources should, however, be received with caution. A mystery hangs over the relief column, which was increased by the intelligence that Sir Archibald Hunter had invaded the Transvaal from Fourteen Streams, and hoisted the British flag at Christiana. South of the Vaal Lord Methuen has occupied Hoopstad.

For some days Sir Leslie Rundle and General Brabant have been sweeping back the Boers who infested the country between Mequatling's Nek and Ladybrand, and who attempted to pass the British cordon and again raid the south-east. The design has been completely frustrated by a skilful distribution of troops, and the enemy have been steadily pushed back. A great store of grain has been seized at the Leeuw River mills, and Mequatling's Nek and Ladybrand occupied. Many prisoners have been taken, many more of the enemy have surrendered, and the residue, completely disorganised, have trekked northwards, probably making for Bethlehem. Thus along the entire front substantial progress is being made in the great combined advance on Pretoria. According to the information which comes to hand as we close our columns the situation continues to improve in all regions of the theatre of war. There is no official news as to the relief of Mafeking, it is true, but everything tends to justify the hope that Colonel Baden-Powell and his gallant little band have been freed ere this from further anxiety. It was by the 18th, it will be remembered, that Lord Roberts promised that relief should come. We have reached the 18th now, and it may reasonably be expected that within twenty-four hours the hearts of Her Majesty's loyal subjects all over the world will be gladdened by the news that all is well. The gallant garrison have sent so many cheering messages themselves that it is only fitting and right that they should not be disappointed now when all is going so well elsewhere. That the end of the war is fast nearing there can be no doubt, for even the Boers themselves seem to have abandoned all hope of standing much longer against Lord Roberts's splendid generalship, which has effectually silenced the critics of the Continent, who are full of admiration both of the man and his methods.

"THE ARMY OF THE FUTURE."

WE have not the least idea of what that will be like. But, taking the language of the Press and special correspondents as indicative of the views and desires of "the people," the "Army of the future" is to be something totally unlike the Army of to-day. The latter still resembles, in many respects, that military force which for the last two centuries took high place among the armies of civilised Europe. The Sovereign will exercise the privilege of approving the appointments in the personnel made by the military executive, formerly called "The Horse Guards," and now termed "The Military Department—The Headquarters Staff of the Army." This is now composed of officers who have their entrances and exits, but who are in no way a permanent Staff. That is a matter of little moment, however, as it is the "War Office" proper—the Secretary of State for the time, with his permanent Under-Secretaries and the Finance Department—who drives the coach. In the Imperial organisation the skeleton framework of the Royal Army will be visible. There must be in the new Army, we presume, a civilian Cabinet Minister as Secretary of State for War. He and his Assistant Secretary, and the civilian heads of departments, are practically the War Office at present. They obey the Government, which is the Committee of Management, depending nowadays on the will of the majority of the House of Commons. "The Queen" heads the present "Army List" (page 1); next is her Majesty's "Chief Personal Aide-de-Camp," Field-Marshal the Duke of Cambridge, with the title of "Honorary Colonel-in-Chief to the Forces;" then Field-Marshal the Prince of Wales, General the Duke of Connaught, and General Prince Frederic of Schleswig-Holstein as "Personal Aides-de-Camp." The page ends with the names of the fifty "Aides-de-Camp" of the Queen, Colonels of the Regular and of the Auxiliary Forces and Indian Staff Corps. Parliament not long ago accepted the recommendation of the Royal Commission that the Duke of Cambridge should be the last Prince of the Blood to be appointed Commander-in-Chief. The curious thing—or one of them—was that the Commission took steps to prevent any successor of his obtaining any similar knowledge, when they recommended that the Duke of Cambridge should be retained in his office because His Royal Highness had such an intimate acquaintance with the personnel of the Army. But there were no personal or professional grounds for barring the way to the Duke of Connaught; and it has been surmised that there was a "set" made against that excellent officer, and a letter in the leading journal went so far as to question the Duke's work at Aldershot and to belittle his military capacity.

In a very long and elaborate article in the Fortnightly Review last month Mr. H. O. Arnold Forster formulates at great length an indictment against the War Office. He declares that "as long as the present personnel of the War Office remains unaltered, no change for the better will take place"! What he wants is to turn out Lord Lansdowne and put Sir Michael Hicks-Beach in his place. Associated with Sir Michael Hicks-Beach there should be a Commander-in-Chief like Lord Roberts. Under him there should be a chief of the staff like Lord Kitchener. As they are both in South Africa some temporary substitutes must be provided. The Permanent Secretary would have, of course, to be replaced, and a competent civil servant put in—"probably an Admiralty employé" would be very fit. Mr. Wyndham, however, might be allowed to stay. "From such a reconstruction every good may be hoped." Among them would be the disappearance of the linked battalion system, which was forced by civilians on the War Office authorities. The reformers are very fond of quoting Switzerland as an example of what a small State may do; they forget or do not know that the Republic is perfectly safe-guarded by the public policy of the States of Europe. The Swiss States were overrun with the greatest ease by the French in the time of the Revolution. An efficient and fully equipped Army must be kept at home prepared at a moment's notice to start for the battlefield. There must be no "shocking waste" in the Army and no loss equal to 48 per 100 of the recruits before the period of Reserve service is reached. Militia and Volunteers are to become efficient soldiers, and we are to aspire to have an Army by voluntary enlistment, which countries with conscription obtain as they please. We cannot eat our cake and have it. We cannot refuse military service and at the same time rival the States which depend upon conscription for filling their armies, and when all is done and the "new model" is turned out for some new Cromwell to handle, the War Office of the future will have an arduous task year after year to keep it up.

THE PRESS, 1854 AND 1899-1900.

WHEN the linked battalion system was so claimed by the Press as the inspiration of a heaven-born Minister to give the State an army capable of sustaining the interests of the Empire at home and abroad, there were some obstinate fellows who received the blessing with misgivings; there were some bold enough to give expression to their doubts. The voice of the nation expressed by the Press, and echoed by Parliament in the form of omnipotent decrees, swept these infidels into the outer darkness. It is not necessary to dwell upon the rude shocks which were speedily given to the new system by the occurrence of campaigns which required something more than punitive expeditions to deal with the enemy; and now there comes a war with two little Dutch republics which disposes of the link system altogether.

There has arisen in the course of this six months' trial of our strength in South Africa a remarkable change in the rôle of the Press and of the correspondents who write for the great papers from South Africa. In the days of the Crimean War the special correspondent—there were not many of them—did not assume to himself the position of a director of the War Department, of a reformer of the military system of the Empire, and of a censor of the generals who were in the field; he simply recorded facts that had occurred, indicated defects that were patent, and wrote as the historian, not as the judge, of the proceedings which he witnessed at the time. The correspondents of the present day, very brilliant writers and possibly very able men, have taken up a very different position. They are not content with recording events, pointing out deficiencies and furnishing the newspapers they serve with matter for suggestion, discussion, and counsel. They boldly soar far beyond the humble heights which their predecessors were satisfied to occupy, and settle without reserve or hesitation the great issues which lie before the country when the war is over. They instruct the nation how to deal with the Army and those who direct it when, in the good time coming, we enjoy the inestimable advantages of a force without one single speck upon the brightness of its panoply, perfect in discipline, in armament, and in power, to meet Imperial necessities at home and abroad and without the slightest defect in its organisation as the armed power of the nation.

Army Notes.

So far as the Republics were concerned, the occupation of Bloemfontein marked the beginning of the end. Unfortunately, a different impression was given to the deluded burghers, though not to expert opinion on the Continent, by the enforced inactivity of Lord Roberts, due to the loss of horses and cattle, the make-believe surrender of the Free Staters, and the slow process of restoring communication across the Orange River. The result was the daring Boer raid, which was checked at Wepener. With the Commander-in-Chief again in the field, the demoralisation of the enemy, begun at Bloemfontein, has gone on without a break. Unable to check the British advance by operations on a similar scale, they are driven from pillar to post as resistlessly as though fate itself was behind them, yet the demoralisation, which was so conspicuously announced on posters during the week, is by no means complete. We have captured few prisoners, little transport, and no big guns. The enemy are sadly shaken, but they are not disorganised. They are past masters in the art of retreating, as we have discovered over and over again in the campaign. That the oft-told tale of Republican dissensions is true may be taken for granted, as the Transvaalers are apparently leaving the Free Staters to their fate while they concentrate on the Vaal. Such an alliance as theirs is bound to dissolve under the pressure of disaster and ruin. The secret withdrawal of the Free Staters from Hlangwane Mountain on Lord Roberts's advance from Kimberley led to its occupation by Sir Redvers Buller, and, indirectly, to the retreat of the Boers from Ladysmith. Even before the arrival of Lord Roberts on the Modder River a large body of Free Staters were said to have left the Magersfontein position and returned home. With the retreat of their allies to the Vaal the forces that will work towards disintegration in the Free State commandoes will be found irresistible. As farmers and pastoralists, the safety of their crops and cattle will trouble them more than the safety of the Republic, which even they must realise is at an end. That they will lose their property if they hold out, and retain it if they submit, are considerations which are certain to appeal to their practical sense, especially as Lord Roberts has shown himself severe to burghers, who have broken their pledges. In any case, Generals Brabant and Rundle have rendered the further resistance of the Free State impossible. So far as it is concerned the game is up.

After the miserable hungle made by the Government in the matter of the Spion Kop despatches, it is not to be expected that armchair critics will cease to criticise, for in effect the Cabinet went out of its way to justify their action. Unfortunately, it is easier to take action which renders a Parliamentary debate a necessity than to restrain even members of the Legislature from indulging in irrelevancies and party bias. The mischievous effects of inviting untrained public opinion to criticise officers in the field is only just beginning to reveal itself. Journalists, newspaper correspondents, and Members of Parliament with a "bee in their bonnet," are all discussing delicate military questions with a plentiful lack of knowledge, as marked as their lack of modesty. Such indiscriminating criticism can only do harm to the army in the field. To allow the public to tear the reputation of generals to shreds and tatters, tends not only to undermine discipline, but in the long run to destroy the confidence of officers in one another. Because Lord Roberts spoke of "the lack of administrative capacity" shown in the Spion Kop affair, one smart journalist takes it for granted that Sir Charles Warren is deficient in all administrative ability. It is entirely overlooked, apparently, that this same officer was thanked by the Government for his services in delimitating the Griqualand West boundary in 1876; settled the land question in the district in 1877; served through the Gaika War in 1878; was thanked by the Home and Colonial Governments for his services in connection with the Griqua Rebellion and Bechuanaland Invasion; was the capable administrator of Griqualand West in 1879; and is the only man who brought President Kruger to his knees without firing a shot in the memorable expedition of 1884-5. This is the man who is held up to derision by ignorant critics, because Lord Roberts, recognising his ability, has seen fit to make him administrator of an important district in South Africa. We say unhesitatingly that the conduct of the home public in respect to some of our senior officers in South Africa has been cruelly unfair. And, unfortunately, by the publication of Lord Roberts's remarks on the Spion Kop despatches, the Government has played into the hands of the arm-chair critics, and created for the War Office a veritable hornet's nest, when the exercise of a slight modicum of ordinary common sense would have prevented much of the mischief.

It is a great pity, after the excellent spirit which the Militia of all ranks have displayed, that steps are not being taken to give some of the battalions now in South Africa a chance of seeing active service in the truest sense. We hear from the seat of war that the battalions in the field are displaying the best qualities of soldierly zeal and enthusiasm. This was only to be expected; but a feeling of the bitterest disappointment pervades all ranks by reason of the decision that the units which are on service shall be relegated to the duties of the lines of communication only, whilst other forces are allowed to play their part as soldiers in the fighting line. We cannot believe that this policy is a wise one. The Militia has laboured for years under the greatest disadvantages. It has, nevertheless, done its duty loyally, and will whenever called upon. We have had unmistakable evidence recently of its value as a reserve to the Army, but for some reason it is still regarded apparently with scant favour. The reason it is difficult to discover, for the force has more than justified the confidence of those who have pleaded for a more enlightened administration. There is nothing to be gained by causing officers and men to feel themselves discredited, as they are bound to do so long as they are treated with a sort of half-hearted confidence. There is no doubt as to the resentment with which the present policy is regarded by the best of Militia officers, and it is fully time that something was done to show that the service is valued as it ought to be. The Service members have made known their views in language which it is impossible to question the wisdom of, but their advice would seem to have fallen on deaf ears in Pall Mall. The war now in progress offered a favourable opportunity for the War Office to exercise a better judgment, and to give the Constitutional force the chance it has long yearned for of again proving its worth. Yet old methods are still adhered to with painful persistency. We trust that it is not too late for the Minister for War to represent to Lord Roberts the incalculable mischief which may be done by keeping this old and tried force wholly in the background, when improvised contingents of all kinds are being used freely in the fore-front. The officers and men of these contingents are rendering doubtless most useful service, and demonstrating their right to be where they are. This, however, only tends to make the treatment of the Militia the more difficult to explain, and it would speak badly indeed for that service if it did not feel that a slur is being cast upon it. If even a brigade of Militia were pushed to the front to meet the enemy, and prove the fitness of the force generally to uphold the credit of British arms, it would go a long way to allay the annoyance caused by what is regarded as systematic neglect. As matters stand, the War Office is going out of its way to create false impressions and intensify those jealousies which a wiser administration would do all in its power to remove.

The idea put forward by Lord Salisbury at the meeting of the Primrose League the other day, that the knights and dames of that organisation should devote themselves to the encouragement of rifle clubs, is one that will scarcely recommend itself to soldiers. The Government may, of course, have views of their own of which we are ignorant, but at first sight it is difficult to recognise the utility of the scheme, even if there were sufficient range accommodation available to render it practical. It is essential that armed men should be disciplined. Rifle clubs might, and probably would, be a source of endless trouble, and organisations of the kind tinged with the bias of politics could not fail to create false impressions and so do incalculable mischief. On all grounds, therefore, the scheme is an objectionable means for creating, as it is perhaps hoped that it might, a military spirit. The suggestions are so crude that it is impossible to regard them seriously. Looking at the matter from the standpoint of military expediency, we are disposed to think that there must be some mistake. We should feel disposed to say that the Prime Minister had been incorrectly reported were it not that all the leading journals are in agreement on the main features of his speech. Evidently Lord Salisbury spoke without previous consultation with the military authorities, for the heads of the Army would surely have made it clear to him on what delicate ground he was treading.

We hope Mr. Wyndham was in earnest when he assured Sir Howard Vincent on Monday that the lessons of the war in South Africa are not being lost upon the War Office. Sir Howard was anxious to see a committee appointed to receive evidence and make recommendations to the War Office with regard to the future administration and training of the Army. To this Mr. Wyndham would not accede, but he admitted that the war had suggested many points of interest in respect to tactical movements. We submit that it is not alone in tactical movement that the war has taught us lessons. It has brought to light many matters which call urgently for reform, and we hope the Service Members in Parliament will do their utmost to insist on these receiving attention at the hands of the authorities. There is a grave danger that when the war is over, and our victorious troops are returning, the lessons of the campaign may be forgotten by the public, but we rely on the Service Members to keep them before the authorities.

The correspondent of the Sydney Mail at the front draws an instructive comparison between the Colonial irregular and the British soldier. He says that the former makes the worst sentry in the world. His bump of locality is so strongly developed that he quickly learns the exact position of the enemy, and where, therefore, to expect danger. Unfortunately his knowledge tends to keep his senses alert only in one direction. He neglects to challenge the officer who approaches him from any other, which is a grave defect. The English soldier, on the other hand, makes an excellent sentry. He has no idea of locality. He cannot even find his own camp. As for the enemy, he is entirely ignorant of his precise whereabouts; hence he keeps his eyes on all sides of him. Not knowing the point from which danger may come, he looks for it in every direction.

The latest news from the Far East is almost sensational, but the public pay little or no heed to it. Until Lord Roberts moves with the swiftness, completeness, and apparent ease, of masterly strategy on Pretoria, Englishmen will take no interest in any other part of the world than South Africa. Yet Russia's newest scheme for tightening her grip on Northern China ought to be sufficiently interesting to stir us even at the present moment. The concession she is about to wring from the Yamen, will enable her to build a railway along the caravan route from Kiachtu, a point south of Lake Baikal, to Peking. It will thus be a branch line of the Trans-Siberian Railway of the utmost strategical importance. Instead of being carried in wide detours across an impracticable and mountainous region, such as Transbaikalia and Manchuria have proved themselves to be, it will be carried in a straight line across a country presenting few or no difficulties to the engineer. In other words, it will be a Mongolian instead of a Manchurian line, and, therefore, safe from the fleets of possible enemies. In a war with China, or in a war with rival Powers who contest her position in that Empire, it will give Russia an alternative route to Peking. Disaster may overtake the Manchurian Railway, which is within striking distance of the sea, but in the Mongolian Railway the astute Slav desires to secure an inaccessible line of communications. Surely this move in Northern China will awaken us to the necessity of constructing the Burmah-Yunnan Railway whose military significance is equally striking. The future of our Indian Empire is at least as important as the future of Uganda and the Soudan.

The present intention of the War Office is to hold an examination of Militia officers for commissions in the Line in September next. It certainly is most desirable that young men who aspire to commissions in the Army should be submitted to some test of fitness, for we foresee all manner of difficulties if they are not. The War Office has been hard pressed to fill vacancies during the last few months we know, and it is unfair not to make allowances. But the present state of things cannot be allowed to continue. In the interests of the young men themselves it is most necessary that at least the military competition should be reintroduced; otherwise, the rejections are bound to be numerous hereafter, unless the promotion examinations are to become more or less a meaningless farce, which would be a thing greatly to be regretted.

There have been many conscientious and hard-working military secretaries at the Horse Guards during the last forty years: but of all the distinguished officers who have held the office, Major-General Sir Coleridge Grove has perhaps been the most hard-working. To his lot it has fallen to conduct the duties of a very difficult and responsible position on the Headquarters Staff during one of the biggest wars in which we have been engaged since the beginning of the century. He has discharged his duties with admirable tact and discretion, and his services have just been acknowledged in a manner which all will approve, he having been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year. Those who know General Grove will be in no way surprised to learn that this recognition of his devotion had almost to be forced upon him, as he thought that there were many more deserving than himself. He is about the only man in the whole Army who would take this view, but it is quite in keeping with his proverbial modesty and generosity of feeling.

Colonel Sir Howard Vincent proposes on Monday to ask the Under-Secretary of State for War if, when the Royal Reserve Regiments are disbanded, any facilities will be offered to officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates within the age limits, and duly recommended for character and capacity, to rejoin the standing Army. If vacancies exist in their respective arms and ranks there would scarcely seem any objection to the War Office giving this proposal favourable consideration.

VETERANS AND THE BATH.

On the 23rd inst. her Majesty's birthday will be celebrated in London. Senior officers naturally hope that it may bring the rewards which are so highly prized in the winter of life. Among the officers of General's rank are those who have been appointed to the colonelcies of regiments. Many of them have not even received a C.B., whilst others, who have received the Bath, have remained for years in the third class, in the "most honourable order."

Generals.

Lord Howe, C.B., 2nd Life Guards.
W. H. Seymour, C.B., 2nd Dragoon Guards.
A. Low, C.B., 4th Hussars.
W. C. Forrest, C.B., 11th Hussars.
A. G. Montgomery-Moore, 18th Hussars.
D. Anderson, Cheshire Regiment.
W. C. E. Napier, King's Own Scottish Borderers.
J. T. Hill, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry.
H. R. Browne, Dorsetshire Regiment.
F. Peyton, C.B., Welsh Regiment.
Hon. R. Rollo, C.B., Black Watch.
F. Burton, C.B., Royal West Kent Regiment.
Sir H. P. de Bathe, Bart., Shropshire Light Infantry.
J. H. Dunne, Wiltshire Regiment.
C. A. Lewis, North Staffordshire Regiment.
J. H. C. Robertson, York and Lancaster Regiment.
W. D. P. Patton-Bethune, Highland Light Infantry.
W. H. Bradford, Royal Irish Rifles.
F. R. Elrington, C.B., Rifle Brigade.
W. J. Chamberlayne, West India Regiment.

Most of these twenty Generals served in the Crimea or in the Indian Mutiny, and only seven of them have received the Companionship of the Bath. The claims of others have been completely ignored year after year. The great disappointment at the time of the Jubilee would be intensified if the Fountain of Honour were sealed up in 1900. Why have Bradford, Browne, Dunne, and Bethune been omitted from the Bath? There may be reasons, as there are for one name or two names in the list perhaps, but they are not known at all events. Why has Sir Henry de Bathe, who was a page at the coronation of the Queen, and was second in command of the Scots Fusilier Guards before Sebastopol, been completely forgotten? He entered the service more than sixty years ago, and he acquitted himself well in the commands which he held at Aldershot, Manchester, and elsewhere, and the prefix to his name was inherited from his father, an old soldier of the Peninsula, and the American war of 1812. He has got nothing whatever to show that he has served the Queen and country in the field—not even a Jubilee medal.

There are thirty-two Lieutenant-Generals in this list, of whom thirteen have received the honour of the Companionship of the Bath. Among the others are officers of well-known service, and some others whose names recall the flies in amber; and a similar remark may be made about the six Major-Generals, two of whom have C.B. to their names, which have been well deserved. Will not the War Office pass a kindly eye over those who have been so long expectant in vain? There are among them soldiers of eminent service, and only those who can get at the reports of the Adjutant-General's vehement can ever know why they have been passed over.

THE QUEEN AT NETLEY.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Henry of Battenberg, Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, and Princess Victoria Eugenie and Prince Leopold of Battenberg, visited her sick and wounded soldiers at Netley Hospital on Wednesday. The special train left about a quarter to two o'clock under the charge of Mr. Fay, and Netley was reached shortly before four o'clock.

The Queen and Princesses were met at the naval station adjoining the hospital by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Baker Russell and the staff of the Portsmouth district. In her own bath-chair her Majesty was wheeled through the hospital, visiting both the surgical and medical sections, where the convalescents were drawn up. Her Majesty went through the wards and conversed with the patients, leaving with each a spray of flowers. Over 600 men who have taken part in the South African campaign were seen by the Queen, including many serious cases. The Royal party returned by special train, reaching Windsor at twenty minutes to eight in the evening.

Several native regiments in the Punjab have received the '303 rifle, which continues to be issued with all despatch.

Army Personal.

The Belfast Corporation has unanimously decided to grant the freedom of the city to Lieut.-General Sir George White. A gold casket to contain the certificate of freedom is being subscribed for by the citizens.

The death is announced of Mrs. Digby Barker, wife of General G. Digby Barker, C.B., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bermuda, which took place after a short illness at Bermuda on Monday.

Lieut.-General Sir Charles Warren, who was to have been Governor of Griqualand West, has now been appointed Military Governor of Cape Colony north of the Orange River—with the exception of the Kimberley district.

Lord Kitchener is still a Major-General on the staff in South Africa, not having been granted higher local rank. He thus has nine junior officers commanding divisions with the rank of Lieutenant-General who are locally his seniors—viz., Sir A. Hunter, Sir L. Rundle, T. Kelly-Kenny, Sir H. Colville, the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton, Sir H. Chermiside, H. J. T. Hildyard, J. D. P. French, and R. Pole-Carew. It is evident that Lord Kitchener is satisfied to bide his time, and has no desire to press his claims to the detriment of others. He thus sets an example of large-mindedness which is greatly to his credit, for we may be certain that any complaint from him would at once be considered. The supersession is, of course, only temporary; but Lord Kitchener's acceptance of the position should go a long way to dispose of the grievances of junior officers, of which we hear frequently, in connection with the distribution of rank and command at the front.

Lieut.-General G. S. Young, C.B., Colonel of the Royal Sussex Regiment, will be offered transfer to the Colonelcy of his old corps, the South Staffordshire Regiment, vacant by the death of General J. W. S. Smith, C.B.

Major-General Sir William Gatacre arrived at Southampton on Saturday morning by the Goorkha from South Africa. He left quietly for London, refusing to be interviewed. He said, however, in response to inquiries, that he had enjoyed a pleasant voyage, and was in the best of health.

Major-General Sir Coleridge Grove, Military Secretary, has been granted a distinguished service reward of £100 a year. He joined the 15th Regiment as Ensign March 17, 1863, on leaving the University, and became a Major-General July 4, 1896. He served in the Egyptian War, 1882, as D.A.A.G. at Headquarters, and was present at Tel-el-Kebir (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, bronze star, brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, and 4th Class of the Osmanieh); also served in the Sudan Expedition, 1884-85, as A.A.G. for boat service, Commandant at Gemai, and A.A.G. and Assistant Military Secretary at Headquarters (mentioned in despatches, two clasps, and brevet of Colonel).

Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate sailed from Suez on Monday in the P. and O. steamer Peninsular for England, on leave.

Major-General Sir Bindon Blood, R.E., commanding the Meerut District, is returning from India on privilege leave, Colonel H. A. Abbott, I.S.C., officiating for him.

Major-General T. A. Cooke has assumed command of the troops assembled on Salisbury Plain for the drill season, his headquarters being established at Tidworth House. He has for his A.A.G. Colonel A. Wilkinson, lately commanding the 19th Regimental District; Lieut.-Colonel G. P. Bourcicault, A.S.C., being A.A.G.(B.); Major E. W. Fleming, R.F.A., is D.A.A.G.; Captains H. R. Hardy, the Queen's, and E. C. H. Grant Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, are in charge of Musketry; and Major J. E. V. Foss, R.A.M.C., is P.M.O. Colonel V. Hatton, C.B., is in command of the 1st (Irish) Brigade, made up of the 5th Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, 5th Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, 4th Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers, and 4th Batn. Leinster Regiment;

Colonel D. C. De Wend commands the 2nd Brigade, made up of the 3rd Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, 3rd Batn. Gloucestershire Regiment, 3rd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, and 3rd Batn. Northamptonshire Regiment; Colonel J. W. Hume, in command of the 3rd Brigade, has under him the 7th Batn. Royal Fusiliers, 3rd Batn. Lincolnshire Regiment, 3rd Batn. East Surrey Regiment, and 5th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers. We are desired to state that the postal addresses are:—"Bulford Camp, Amesbury, Wilts;" and "Perham Down Camp, Ludgershall, Andover."

Colonel the Hon. J. Scott Napier is en route to South Africa in the transport Assaye to take up the special duties as A.A.G. lines of communication, for which he has been selected, and Colonel G. M. Fox has joined at Aldershot to replace him temporarily as Inspector of Gymnasia.

Colonel M. S. Bell, V.C., C.B., R.E., having attained the limit of age, is placed on the retired list from the 15th inst. An A.D.C.-ship to the Queen having thus become vacant, it has been filled by the appointment of Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. E. McCallum, K.C.M.G., R.E., Governor of Newfoundland, who thus becomes a Colonel in the Army. Sir Henry McCallum is forty-seven years of age, joined the Army December 15, 1871, and became Lieutenant-Colonel October 7, 1897. He served in the Perak Expedition 1875-76. Whilst at Singapore he was selected for Colonial employment, became Governor of Lagos in 1897, and last year went to Newfoundland.

Colonel G. Henry, R.E., takes up the duties of D.A.G. Madras, and will be gazetted a Brigadier-General accordingly, Brigadier-General G. Simpson, I.S.C., having been selected for a Second Class District command.

Colonel J. K. Spilling, retired list, late 13th Hussars, has taken over command of the Reserve Regiment of Hussars, which is being formed at Hounslow, with Major W. J. Underwood, late 4th Hussars, as second-in-command.

Colonel J. Davis, A.D.C., 3rd Batn. Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment, has taken over command of the Militia Brigade embodied at Gosport. The appointment has given much satisfaction, as Colonel Davis is quite an enthusiast in all matters relating to the Service, the interests of which he has done so much to advance.

Colonel J. F. Hilton, 23rd Regimental District, has been appointed to the command of the troops in Barbados, with the temporary rank of Major-General, vice Major-General R. F. Butler.

Colonel T. E. Hickman, D.S.O., Worcestershire Regiment, who has been serving with the Egyptian Army since September, 1897, is proceeding to South Africa on special service.

Colonel J. H. S. Craigie, late Highland Light Infantry, who has just been appointed to the officiating command of the Sind District, is coming home on three months' privilege leave.

Colonel P. H. Dalbiac, M.P., late Captain Derbyshire Regiment, has been granted four years' extension of command of the 18th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers.

Sir Montagu Frederick Ommann, K.C.M.G., retired Royal Engineers, has been appointed Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, in succession to Sir Edward Wingfield, K.C.B., retired on pension. He entered the Royal Engineers in January, 1864, and became Captain in 1878, was employed on special duty under the War Office and the Admiralty from 1866 to 1870, and at the Royal Military Academy from 1867 to 1874. He acted as Private Secretary to the Earl of Carnarvon, Secretary of State for the Colonies, from March, 1874, to January, 1877, when he was appointed a Crown Agent for the Colonies.

Lieut.-Colonel D. F. R. Dawson, C.M.G., late Coldstream Guards, whose five years as Military Attaché in Paris expire on July 13, has been granted an extension for twelve months.

Lieut.-Colonel Lord Castletown, 4th Batn Leinster Regiment, who went out to the Cape some time ago on special service, has been appointed Commissioner for the Wepener district.

Lieut.-Colonels B. R. Hawes and R. S. H. Moody, recently appointed to the command of the 3rd and 4th Batns. Royal Munster Fusiliers, which it has since been decided not to proceed with the raising of, are en route to South Africa in the transport Assaye, having been selected for special service.

Lieut.-Colonel T. P. Battersby, A.O.D., is appointed Deputy-Assistant-Director-General of Ordnance at Headquarters.

Major C. M. T. Western, R.F.A., has been confirmed in the appointment of Assistant-Military Secretary to Lieut.-General Sir George Wolseley, commanding in Madras.

Major the Hon. G. C. Twisleton-Wykeham-Fiennes, 3rd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-General E. S. Brook, commanding the 2nd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot.

Major S. MacDougall, retired list, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, has been appointed to the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, in the vacancy created by the retirement of Captain Walrond Clarke.

Major C. H. Dale, late of the Canadian Militia, and formerly Lieutenant 102nd Foot, has been appointed a Military Knight of Windsor on the Lower Foundation, vice Major R. Molesworth, deceased.

Captain H. H. P. Deasy, late 16th Lancers, has been awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society in recognition of the admirable exploring and survey work he has done in Central Asia during his two expeditions extending over two years.

Captain C. W. Darby-Griffith, who lately rejoined the Grenadier Guards for duty from the Reserve of Officers, has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-General Trotter in the Home District, vice Captain G. D. White, Grenadier Guards, proceeding on active service.

Captain C. A. G. Webb, Royal Munster Fusiliers, has been appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate in Egypt, Captain R. A. Markham, Coldstream Guards, being A.D.C.

Officers qualified as interpreters at recent examination in foreign languages:—Captains E. M. J. Burn, R.E., and S. C. F. Jackson, D.S.O., Hampshire Regiment, in French; and Lieutenant F. G. Danielson, 1st V.B. Royal Warwickshire Regiment, in German.

Lieutenants C. F. Harold and R. Martin, I.S.C., have been selected for employment with the Egyptian Army.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, May 12.

Lord Roberts entered Kroonstad at the head of his troops at 1.30, his occupation not being opposed. Mr. Steyn had hurried away the previous night for Heilbron, after issuing a proclamation constituting that place the new seat of the Orange State government. Headquarters with the 11th Division reached Geneva Siding, 14 miles from Kroonstad, last night, after a 20 miles march, said to have been splendidly performed by all arms. The Boers were understood to be entrenched at Boschrand, six miles further on. Gen. Gordon's Brigade was, therefore, pushed forward, and soon succeeded in turning the position, which was evacuated during the night. In the course of the day Gen. French seized a drift over the Valsch River in time to prevent the passage being opposed. The 7th Division moved up to the south-east of Geneva Siding, and Gen. Ian Hamilton, with his mounted infantry, occupied a position further east. Resuming his march in the early hours to-day, Lord Roberts arrived at Boschrand at 8.30. Cavalry were directed to reconnoitre, and finding the enemy's positions abandoned the advance was continued. By 1.45 the Union Jack was hoisted in the market place. Lord Roberts sent off his official message at 2 p.m. It was to this effect:—

"I entered Kroonstad without opposition at 1.30 to-day, when the Union Jack was hoisted amidst the cheers of the few British residents. The procession entering the town was headed by my bodyguard, all of them Colonials. After the staff and foreign officers came the North Somerset Company of the Imperial Yeomanry, followed by Pole-Carew's Division, consisting of Guards and the 18th Brigade, the Naval Brigade, the 83rd, 84th, and 85th Batteries, two 5in. guns, manned by Royal Artillerymen, and the 12th Company Royal Engineers. The rest of the force are encamped round the town."

Monday, May 14.

Two despatches were received from Lord Roberts. One dealt with a correspondence which had passed between the Field Marshal and President Kruger regarding the treatment of Colonial prisoners of war in Pretoria. Replying to the representations of the Commander-in-Chief the President stated that no distinction was made between Colonial and other prisoners, and that those only were confined in the common gaol who had committed breaches of discipline, or had tried or were suspected of an intention to escape. Every possible care, he added, was being taken of the sick. Lord Roberts, in acknowledging the message, pointed out that the regulations appeared to give room for abuses on the part of officials.

In the second message Lord Roberts reported a white-flag incident with regret. It seems that in the operations of the 10th inst. some of our cavalry were decoyed into an ambush under cover of a white flag. Approaching the kraal over which the flag was flying they were suddenly fired upon, with the result that Capt. Elworthy, of the Carabiniers, was killed, and two officers wounded. In another case, a party of our men going up to a kraal where a white flag had been hoisted, were fired upon by a large number of the enemy. Two officers—Capt. Haig, Inniskilling Dragoons, and Lieut. Wilkinson, 1st Australian Horse—were taken prisoners, and 21 men are unaccounted for, although some of those reported missing at first have since found their way back.

Tuesday, May 15.

The War Office received to-day a series of despatches from Sir Redvers Buller describing at length the operations of the force under his command since Friday morning last. These documents may be summarised thus:—On Friday Gen. Buller concentrated at Sunday's River Drift on the Helpmakaar road the 3rd Cavalry Brigade, the 2nd Division, and some corps artillery. At the same time Col. Bethune was ordered to advance from Greytown with his mounted infantry, the Umvoti Mounted Rifles, and the Imperial Light Infantry. On Saturday Gen. Buller was at Waschbank, Col. Bethune at Pomeroy, and Gen. Hildyard, with the 5th Division, at Indoda Mountains. Next day the advance was continued on all sides, and the enemy fell back to the nek in front of Helpmakaar. This they evacuated on Sunday night, leaving behind a rearguard of 1,000 men. Fighting was continued throughout Monday, during which Lord Dundonald with the cavalry forced the rearguard back on the main body near Zunalinden. He covered nearly forty miles during the day, notwithstanding that the enemy had fired the grass, and the troops had to move through a thick cloud of hot smoke. Simultaneously Gen. Hildyard occupied Wessel's Nek, and began repairing the railway. This morning the advance troops entered Dundee, from which about 2,500 of the enemy yesterday took train for Laing's Nek. Their waggons went by the De Jager's Drift and Dannhauser road. The town was found to be looted, and in some of the collieries the machinery had been destroyed.

Wednesday, May 16.

The War Office received a telegram from Sir Redvers Buller announcing that his troops occupied Glencoe yesterday; that the Transvaalers have now evacuated the Biggarsberg, and the Free Staters on the Drakensberg are much reduced in numbers. The last train of the enemy's transport left Glencoe at dawn yesterday. The retirement of the Boers has been largely produced by the action of the 5th Division, which is stated to have done a great deal of very hard work, marching, mountain-climbing, and road-making, all carried out in excellent spirit under the able leadership of Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard. Trains are now running to Wessels Nek Station. The Boer retreat from Dundee is described by the Times correspondent as "an utter rout."

Thursday, May 17.

Sir Redvers Buller reported to the War Office to-day from Dannhauser that the 2nd Division had reached that place, and that he hoped his advanced patrols were in Newcastle. The 5th Division was echeloned from Elandslaagte to Glencoe, repairing the railway, and the 4th Division was at Sunday River Drift, on the old Newcastle road.

Lord Roberts reported that Sir Archibald Hunter had entered the Transvaal on Tuesday, and occupied Christiana yesterday without opposition, the enemy having retired to Klerksdorp. Lord Methuen had advanced 12 miles on the Hoopstad road without seeing any of the enemy.

Friday, May 18.

A Reuter's telegram to-night states,

"Mafeking has been relieved. Food has entered the garrison. Enemy dispersed."

Up to the time of going to press no news had been received at the War Office of the relief of Mafeking, although the impress was that good news would come very shortly from that quarter. Lord Methuen, it was officially announced, entered Hoopstad yesterday without opposition. Generals Duprez and Daniels surrendered to him. Major-Gen. Ian Hamilton's cavalry occupied Lindley yesterday after slight opposition. Steyn not there. Major-Gen. Hutton's Mounted Infantry surprised and captured Commandant Botha 37 miles N.W. Kroonstad.

Sir A. Hunter with Hart's Brigade had returned to Fourteen Streams from Christiana, at which town General Barton remains. The reason for General Hunter's action is not stated.

Lord Roberts remains at Kroonstad, to which place the railway is being rapidly repaired. The Boers have been located at the Rhenoster River, some 40 miles north of Kroonstad.

A Boer despatch from Volkrust, on the Transvaal border, announces the abandonment of Newcastle by the enemy. The Queen has telegraphed to Gen. Buller congratulating him and his troops on the occupation of Dundee.

Lindley is the third capital of the Free State occupied by our troops. This ought to prove to the Free Staters convincingly that further opposition is useless. Not far from Lindley is Vecht Kop, on one of the Rhenoster Spruits, where it is said that the Boers intend making a stand. The capture of Lindley and the surrender of several prominent Boer leaders will, no doubt, have the effect of lessening the ardour of the Free State Boers considerably.

Hoopstad, occupied by Lord Methuen, is on the eastern bank of the Vet River. The Commandant Botha who has been captured is probably Philip Botha, who was one of the chief commanders of the force which held Kroonstad, and not Louis Botha, the Commandant-General of the Transvaal forces.

The Mansion House Fund for Widows and Orphans amounted this morning to £907,570. Of that sum £392,785 had been subscribed for the widows and orphans, £89,354 for the sick and wounded, £96,337 for the disabled soldiers and sailors, and £171,452 for the wives and families of the troops. A sum of £142,359 has been placed at the Lord Mayor's discretion for distribution among these four branches or other kindred objects connected with the war. The destination of £15,283 received from the Colonies has not yet been indicated.

LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR GEORGE WHITE.

In the Town Hall, Chelsea, on Tuesday afternoon, Lieut.-Gen. Sir George White was the recipient of an address from the vestry on behalf of the inhabitants. Mr. J. J. Wheeler was the chairman. Guards of honour were furnished by the South Middlesex Rifle Volunteers and Pensioners of Chelsea Hospital. Sir George White, accompanied by Lady White and Miss White, arrived at a quarter to five o'clock, and was received by the chairman and members of the vestry in the Council Chamber. On entering the hall the vast assembly rose and cheered again and again, and the cheers were renewed when Miss Lelia Wright presented Lady White with a handsome bouquet. A "battle hymn" arranged by Mr. Villiers Stanford having been sung by Madame Lucile Hill, Mr. Wheeler said the address they were about to present to Sir George White was intended as a recognition not only of his services in the defence of Ladysmith, but his long career of service in the Army.

Mr. T. Holland, clerk of the vestry, read the address, which expressed the admiration of the inhabitants of the parish for Sir George White's brilliant services in South Africa.

Mr. Wheeler then presented the address, enclosed in a silver-gilt casket, designed and manufactured by the Goldsmiths and Silversmiths' Company, and bearing on its panels enamelled views of Chelsea, the seal of the vestry and a replica of the Victoria Cross.

Sir George White, in acknowledging the compliment which had been paid him, said the address and casket would be cherished as an heirloom in his family. The kind words that had been said and the welcome that had been accorded would be almost embarrassing if it were not that he felt that every action, every cheer, every word applied to 12,000 other soldiers as well as himself, those who were associated with him in the defence of Ladysmith, and who were still fighting in the Orange Free State and Natal, and bearing the hardships inseparable from a campaign. He could not help feeling a great pleasure in knowing that when the report of this splendid welcome was made known in South Africa every one of that 12,000 who heard it would share in the joy and the pride which he himself felt at that moment. He believed that the tide had turned, and that the magnificent efforts which this country had made would now bear fruit in securing the military ascendancy of Great Britain. At the commencement of the campaign our position was not so sure; we ran certain risks, but they had turned out for the best. If in the first instance we had poured hundreds and thousands of men into Natal the Boers might have said that it was our aggression that had brought on the war. They could not say so now. From the commencement, as we now knew, they had set their hearts on conquering Natal, and they were ambitious of securing the whole country from Majuba to the sea. Unfortunately for them Ladysmith stood in the way. It was the most important town in Natal, and there the forces of the Free State and the Transvaal united under Joubert, who was a brave and civilised soldier. The capture of Ladysmith was designed by the Boers as a guarantee to the disaffected Dutch population that they could overcome the British force, and it was hoped it might be the signal for a general rising. Ladysmith had to bear the brunt of the first big attack, and if its defenders held it long enough to facilitate the magnificent development which subsequently took place they might be pardoned for congratulating themselves. Now they saw the forces of the Mother Country and the Colonies fighting together as one unconquerable whole.

Lord Monkswell proposed and Mr. Whitmore, M.P., seconded a vote of thanks to the chairman, who briefly responded, and the proceedings closed with the National Anthem most heartily sung.

Obituary.

NAVY.

Commander the Hon. William Grimston, a younger son of the second Earl of Verulam, and brother of the present peer, died on May 10 at his residence, Morolin, Hampton, Middlesex, in his 46th year. He entered the Service in 1868, and during the Egyptian War of 1882, as Lieutenant of the Thalia, was employed in the transport service, and, landing with the Naval Brigade, was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He had the Egyptian medal, with clasp for Tel-el-Kebir, and the Khedive's bronze star. He also had the Royal Humane Society's silver medal, for going at great personal risk to the rescue of an able seaman of the Alexandra, off Beyrout, in Aug. 29, 1884, and assisting in saving his life. He was placed on the Commanders' retired list in October, 1885.

ARMY.

Major-Gen. Hugh Richard Hope, C.B., retired list, Madras Cavalry, died at Winchester on the 11th inst., aged 55. A son of the late Major-Gen. A. H. Born Feb. 22, 1862, he joined the Royal Artillery Feb. 22, 1882; became Captain April 30, 1890; Major Jan. 4, 1900. He had passed the Ordnance College, was Inspector of Warlike Stores, Cape Town, 1892-96, and became Ordnance Officer, 4th class, April 1, 1898.

Major Fitzhardinge Kingscote, late of the Rifle Brigade, died at his residence, Furbough, near Galway, on the 9th inst., aged 63. He was a son of the late T. H. Kingscote, of Kingscote, Gloucestershire. He joined the Army as Ensign April 7, 1854; became Lieutenant Nov. 6, 1854; Captain Feb. 26, 1856; and retired in 1862 by sale of his commission. He served with the 41st Regiment at the siege and fall of Sebastopol from Nov. 15, 1854, and was severely wounded, right arm amputated, at the attack on the Redan on Sept. 8 (medal with clasp, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). After leaving the Army he was appointed to a Company in the North Cork Militia, from which he retired with the rank of Major. He was half-brother of Col. Sir R. N. F. Kingscote.

Capt. Charles Kershaw Elworthy, 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers), was killed in action at Zand River on the 10th inst. Born Sept. 16, 1865, he joined the Carabiniers Jan. 30, 1889; became Lieutenant April 16, 1890; and Captain Sept. 4, 1895.

Capt. Dudley Gillum Seagrim, R.G.A., died at Cape Town on the 15th inst., of abscess of the liver. Born July 7, 1867, he joined the Royal Artillery July 24, 1886; and became Captain July 3, 1897. He had passed the Staff College, and served in the Burmese Expedition, 1885-89 (medal with two clasps); Zho Valley Expedition, 1890; Isazai Expedition, 1892; and Waziristan Expedition, 1894-95; including the delimitation escort and attack on camp at Wano (clasp).

Capt. Charles Herbert Hicks, 2nd Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, was killed in the action at Spion Kop on Jan. 24 last, but intelligence of his fate has only just been received. Capt. Hicks, who was 37 years of age, was the elder son of the late Gen. Hicks Pacha and of Mrs. Hicks, of Birley, Camberley. He entered the Lancashire Fusiliers from the Militia Nov. 12, 1884; became Captain Dec. 20, 1892; and from 1894 till the breaking out of the war was Paymaster of the Deolali Depot, Bombay. He vacated that position in order to proceed on active service.

Capt. Leonard Head, 1st Batn. East Lancashire Regiment, was dangerously wounded on the Zand River on the 10th inst., and afterwards died of his wounds. Born June 24, 1867, he joined the East Lancashire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant Feb. 11, 1888; became Lieutenant Aug. 10, 1890; was Adjutant 1894-98; and became Captain July 1, 1896. He served in the operations in Chitral, 1895, with the relief force (medal with clasp).

Capt. Thomas Walter Milward, 1st Batn. Essex Regiment, died at Bloemfontein on the 10th inst. of pneumonia. Born April 10, 1867, the fourth son of the late Col. T. W. Milward, C.B., R.A., he joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant, Essex Regiment, Feb. 11, 1888; became Lieutenant Aug. 6, 1890; was Adjutant 1892-96; and obtained his company Feb. 2, 1898. He was wounded at the battle of Paardeberg, but nevertheless remained with the regiment throughout the march to Bloemfontein, and was present at the battle of Driefontein, when the Essex and the Welsh Regiments drove the enemy from their entrenchments at the point of the bayonet.

Capt. Harry Seddon Pickard, 2nd Batn. North Staffordshire Regiment, died at Bloemfontein on the 12th inst., of enteric fever. Born April 29, 1866, he joined the North Staffordshire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant, Feb. 11, 1888; became Lieutenant March 2, 1890; and Captain Feb. 26, 1896.

Capt. Henry Paton Rogers, 2nd Batn. Wiltshire Regiment, died at Bloemfontein on the 13th inst., of enteric fever. Born April 2, 1874, he joined the Wiltshire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant, Oct. 10, 1894; became Lieutenant July 29, 1896; and was promoted to his Company in a recent Gazette.

Capt. Thomas Adam Fischer, I.S.C. (22nd Madras Infantry), died at Wardha, Central Provinces, on the 9th inst. Born May 20, 1863, a son of Mr. T. H. Fischer, Q.C., Bedford Park, Chiswick, he joined the Yorkshire Regiment as Lieutenant March 10, 1883; was transferred to the Staff Corps Nov. 19, 1884; and became Captain March 10, 1894. He served in the Burmese expedition 1885-89 (medal with two clasps).

Lieut. Charles Edward Martin, 1st Batn. Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians), died at sea on board the Dilwara, en route to the Cape, of pneumonia. Born Jan. 8, 1876, he joined the Leinster Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant March 24, 1897; and became Lieutenant July 5, 1899.

Capt. Henry Esmonde Dowse, R.A.M.C., died of remittent fever at Bloemfontein, on the 5th inst. Born Jan. 20, 1868, he joined the Army Jan. 31, 1891.

Capt. Rupert Fawcett, R.A.M.C., attached to the 2nd Life Guards, died at Bloemfontein on the 7th inst., of dysentery. Born March 4, 1869, third son of the late Rev. Robert Fawcett, he joined the Army July 29, 1895; and joined the 2nd Life Guards Sept. 19, 1897.

2nd Lieut. Basil Eric Cummings, R.A. (No. 15 Company Western Division), died at Deelfontein on the 9th inst., of enteric fever. Born March 19, 1880, he joined the Army June 25, 1899.

2nd Lieut. Arthur Charles FitzGerald Homan, R.G.A., died at Naauwpoort, South Africa, on the 11th inst., of enteric fever. Born July 14, 1878, he joined the Royal Artillery, Dec. 23, 1897, and went to the front some time ago on special service.

2nd Lieut. Alfred Higgott Armitage, 2nd Batn. Duke of Wellington's Regiment, died at Rangoon on the 8th inst., of enteric fever, aged 24. He was son of the Rev. G. Armitage, late Vicar of Silverdale, Staffordshire. He joined the 3rd Batn. Duke of Wellington's Regiment, Oct. 12, 1898, and was transferred to the 2nd Batn. on Dec. 9 last.

THE MILITARY TOURNAMENT.

The twenty-first Military Tournament was opened yesterday by the Prince and Princess of Wales. Major-Gen. Trotter, in a short speech about the prospects of the Tournament, at the rehearsal on Thursday, offered an apology for whatever deficiencies this year might be noticeable. On the whole, however, the features of the Tournament are quite as attractive as usual, and one or two of the items on the programme are exceptionally interesting. Especially popular, for instance, will be the performance of the sailors from the Excellent and the Powerful. The dress rehearsal began with a display by the field battery of the Excellent, and a merry performance it was, the four 9prs. being hauled about, taken to pieces, and put together again in the smartest way possible. Next came the musical drive of N Battery, R.H.A., which was very effective. The bare-back riding was as good as usual, which is high praise; it was followed by a capital display by the cycling detachment of the 26th Middlesex R.V. Following a display by the N.C.O.'s under instruction at the Aldershot gymnasium, came that of the men from the Powerful. This performance fairly took the house, for the original 4'7 "Joe Chamberlain" was hauled into the arena by a team of black oxen, guided by the sailors themselves. The drill was beyond praise, and the heroes of Ladysmith got a great reception. Then followed the musical ride of the 2nd Life Guards, quite up to old form. The pageant, entitled "Defence, not Defiance," illustrative of the history of the Volunteers, is a gay and yet an impressive display. The committee are much to be congratulated, for a better show has not been produced for years, and if the Agricultural Hall is not filled during the next fortnight it certainly will not be the fault of those who are responsible for this year's Tournament.

GERMAN MILITARY OPINION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have returned from a visit to Germany. Whilst there I had many opportunities of discussing the war with officers of the army. I am bound to say that I found no unfriendly feeling existing among them. On the contrary, all to whom I spoke expressed themselves sensible of our difficulties and defended our generals, who they say are more or less the victims of our social system. As one prominent general officer commanding an Army Corps put it to me, "Your whole surroundings in England seem to be against the generals. It is all a case with you of—Society, society, society! Your system wants to be revised. It is different with your Navy. In the Navy a ship is commissioned and goes off to sea. For the years of its commission all is work, and there are no female influences. The wives do not know one another. Even your Commander-in-Chief in South Africa has his wife at the front with him. It is bad, all bad. You will have to alter all this before you can expect to have highly-trained general officers and men coming forward to replace them. A soldier must be a soldier before everything. If you have not any form of compulsion in your Army you ought to be all the more careful to have your system free from abuses." I am not at liberty to mention the name of the distinguished officer who thus expressed himself. I can say this, however, he is distinctly friendly to us, and recognised that there is much in our Army to admire. On these matters he laid such stress that I think I am justified in making his ideas known, for there may be reason in them, though my wife I cannot induce to appreciate his reasoning. COLONEL, R.A.

10th Hussars.—Capt. Lord George Scott sailed from Cape Town on the 9th inst. for England in the Pavonia, invalided.

11th Hussars.—Major Rycroft has left Egypt for South Africa on special service.

13th Hussars.—The Reserve Squadron has been moved from Hounslow to Norwich.

14th Hussars.—Capt. Prevost left England on Thursday in the Cavour for South Africa to join headquarters.

15th Hussars.—Capt. Aspinall, retired list, has been appointed to the Remount Staff at the Cape.

18th Hussars.—Major Marling, V.C., left Cape Town on the 10th inst. for England in the Tagus, invalided. Capt. Pollok, who has been a prisoner of war at Pretoria since the battle of Glencoe, has been appointed a J.P. for the county of Ayrshire.

19th Hussars.—Lieut. Binny left Cape Town on the 10th inst. for England in the Tagus, invalided.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. F. M. Banister has been granted leave from India to England for four months, and Lieuts. H. J. A. Mackey, E. Battery R.H.A., and L. B. Montresor, 1st. Battery R.F.A., for six months each, on medical certificate.

Lieut.-Col. E. H. Pickwood, R.F.A., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Pavonia on the 9th inst.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 48th (Submarine Mining) Company and half the 44th (Fortress) Company left Liverpool on the 10th inst., in the Tunisian for Esquimault, B.C.

Majors J. Burn-Murdoch, J. G. Day, and H. F. Chesney have passed the examination qualifying for the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Instructions have been given for memorials to be erected at the burial places of the officers and men of the Brigade of Guards who fell in the battles of November and December at Belmont, Modder River, and Magersfontein. The memorials will be of one design, a marble cross resting on a granite base, bearing the words "Tria juncta in uno," and the names of the fallen. The graves will be enclosed by a stone wall and railing. Capt. White and 2nd Lieuts. Lord H. C. Seymour, Leslie-Melville, Vivian and Brooke, 1st Batn., are about to leave England for the Cape to join the 3rd Batn. Capt. Trotter, who lost his arm at Glen, has arrived home from the Cape in the Dunottar Castle.

Coldstream Guards.—Brevet-Major Fremantle and Lieuts. Hanbury-Tracy, Grant, and Herbert-Stepney, 3rd Batn., are about to leave England for the Cape to join the battalions in the field.

Scots Guards.—Instructions have been given to call up the Section D men of the Reserve of the regiment. Major Romilly, D.S.O., is about to be promoted to the command of the 2nd Batn., vice Col. Inigo Jones; and Major the Hon. C. Harbord to that of the 1st Batn., vice Col. Paget. Major Harbord leaves England at once for South Africa to take over his duties, on promotion, and will be accompanied by 2nd Lieut. Lord Granard, 3rd Batn.

Irish Guards.—Returns have been prepared this week from the other Guards regiments of all men of Irish nationality who are willing to be transferred to the new regiment. The uniform has not yet been finally settled, but generally it will be of the same pattern as that of the other three regiments. The bearskin cap, it is proposed, shall have at the right side a green plume, white at the base; the band of the forage cap will also most probably be green, and the field cap will have green piping along the top. Shamrock badges will be worn on the collar and shoulder straps, and on the forage and field caps, as a badge, the Star of the Order of St. Patrick. Buttons will bear the Irish harp and crown, and the buckle of the waist-belt will show the St. Patrick Star, surrounded by the words "Irish Guards" and a spray of shamrocks. On the front of the tunic the buttons will be in groups of four, the regiment being the 4th Guards, thus following the arrangement in the other regiments, the Grenadiers (1st Guards) having their buttons at regular intervals, the Coldstream (2nd Guards) in groups of two, and the Scots (3rd Guards) in groups of three. There will also be four buttons on each cuff and four bars on the flaps of the skirt and cuffs. Lieut. Orichton, from the Grenadier Guards, has taken up the duties of Adjutant, on appointment. Sergt.-Major Fowles, 1st Batn. Grenadier Guards, has been selected for promotion to Quartermaster of the 1st Batn.

Royal Scots (1st).—Capt. Nash, 1st Batn., left England on Thursday for South Africa in command of troops in the Cavour to join headquarters. Lieut. Smith, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Cephalonia for England on the 4th inst., invalided.

Queen's (2nd).—Capt. Hardy has joined at Salisbury Plain from Dublin as District Inspector of Musketry for the drill season.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Lieut.-Col. Gawne left England on the 11th inst. in the Assaye for South Africa to assume command of the 2nd Batn., on promotion.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Capt. Armstrong sailed from Cape Town on the 4th inst. for England in the Cephalonia, invalided. Major James, 1st Batn., sailed on the 9th inst. in the Pavonia, also invalided.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Major Wilkinson has been appointed second in command of the new 4th Batn. 2nd Lieut. Rayner, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Cephalonia on the 4th inst., invalided.

King's Regiment (8th).—Major Nicholson, 3rd Batn., acts temporarily as District Inspector of Musketry, Dublin district.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—Details moved on Monday from Shorncliffe to Colchester; Major Percy has been appointed second in command of the 2nd Batn. in South Africa, vice Major Beecher promoted to the command of the 1st Batn. in India; Capt. Inglis, 1st Batn., is employed as a Recruiting Staff Officer, Woolwich district. The Central News correspondent telegraphed from Kroonstad on Wednesday:—"A splendid piece of marching was accomplished by a detachment of 105 Norfolk Volunteers who arrived this afternoon. They had completed 22 miles in five hours. Not a single man fell out. They swung into camp looking as fresh as if they were just starting. Lord Roberts was much interested, and the staff regard it as an illustration of the excellent spirit actuating the entire body of Volunteers at the front."

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Capt. Chandler, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Pavonia on the 9th inst., invalided.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Capt. Clarke, on special service, has been appointed Staff Officer at Vet River, South Africa.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—Details moved on Monday from Shorncliffe to Colchester. Col. Riddell, 1st Batn., has been selected to officiate as an A.A.G., Bengal, and Major Fraser is in acting command.

Leicester Regiment (17th).—Major Scott, 1st Batn., left Cape Town on the 10th inst. for England in charge of invalids in the Tagus. Capt. Harvey sailed on the 9th inst. in the Pavonia, also invalided.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Davis, 2nd Batn., has taken up the duties of Station Staff Officer, Poona.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Capt. Gildea, 6th Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Cephalonia on the 4th inst., invalided.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Major Stanuel is acting as Assistant Military Secretary to Major-Gen. Egerton during the time that he officiates in command of the Punjab Army.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Capt. Addison, 1st Batn., has been appointed Station Staff Officer, Meerut. Capt. Jones, 2nd Batn., left Cape Town on the 10th inst. for England in the Tagus, invalided.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Capt. Greig, 3rd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Cephalonia, on the 4th inst., invalided. Lieut. McAlester succeeds Brevet-Major Haig as Adjutant of the 2nd Batn.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Lieut. Manley and 2nd Lieut. Stewart left Cape Town on the 10th inst. for England in the Tagus, invalided.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th).—Details have been moved from Athlone to Salisbury Plain. A strong draft of 200 men from the details left behind by the 2nd Batn. left Athlone on the 11th inst. and embarked at Queenstown on the Mahratta to join the 4th (Militia) Batn. at St. Helena. The band of the 3rd Batn. Highland Light Infantry played the men to the station. Capt. Hutson, 5th Batn. Liverpool Regiment, and Lieut. Menzies, 3rd Batn., were the officers in charge of the draft. A statement was published recently to the effect that Major Capel-Cure, D.S.O., was "suffering from mental affliction, due to his wounds and imprisonment in Pretoria." There is no foundation for this rumour, as the officer is now in good health. His wounds were very severe, but he has borne his sufferings with utmost patience and resolution.

East Surrey Regiment (31st).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. has moved from Enniskillen into camp at Finner. This battalion we are assured has "won golden opinions at Enniskillen, the excellent discipline of the men having been proverbial."

Border Regiment (34th).—Details have been moved from Fermoy to Kilworth Camp.

South Lancashire Regiment (40th).—Capt. Vaughan, 3rd Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Pavonia on the 9th inst., invalided.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—The infant son of the late Capt. Lomax was christened at St. George's, Hanover Square, on the 10th inst. Capt. Lomax fell at Driefontein while gallantly leading the night attack of his regiment on March 10. The Queen graciously signified her intention of being godmother to his infant son, born shortly after his death, and was

The instruction will include musketry practice and exercise in dismounting and outpost work. The Duke of Beaufort is in command.

LITERATURE OF THE WAR.

The war in South Africa has led to a wonderful outpouring of literature, and we have already found occasion to refer to many books that have been published. A number of others are yet upon our table, and we propose to say something about four of them which are concerned with the defence and relief of Ladysmith, and all have been written by trained observers. Taken together, they may be said to form a complete history of the Natal campaign, and are certainly a very acceptable addition to official despatches. Mr. Pearce, of the Daily News, and Mr. Nevinson, of the Daily Chronicle, were among the besieged, and therefore their volumes demand first consideration. Four Months Besieged (Macmillan and Co.) is the title of Mr. Pearce's admirable book. He had the good fortune to enjoy sound health throughout the siege, and, though he had some narrow escapes, was never hit. Once a Boer shell burst into his writing-room at the Ladysmith Hotel, smashed everything, spread confusion, and buried all his papers under a mass of wreckage. There was scarcely a thing in the place that had not been torn by the blast of powder or cut by the splinters of Long Tom's shell. Fortunately for Mr. Pearce's readers he was not in the place at the time. Many of the runners who brought his letters out of the town either failed in their object, or never attempted it, so that the whole of the volume with the exception of one or two chapters is new to the public. It gives a remarkably good account of the various battles and of the siege, and is written with the vigorous and picturesque pen that its accomplished author wields so well. The maps that accompany it are admirable, and the book is cast in an excellent mould. It is extremely pleasant to read its high appreciation of our troops, working through the long days of wearisome monotony, broken only by the scream of the shells or watching at night in the sodden trenches, taking part in many a struggle, and continuing doggedly to keep the flag flying until the end. Mr. Pearce thought, to begin with, that Sir George White "lacked the enterprise of a great leader," but he ends with the sound and generous conclusion that the more cautious policy was right.

Ladysmith, the Diary of a Siege, by H. W. Nevinson (Methuen and Co.) is the other volume describing the defence. The enterprising correspondent of the Chronicle, like Mr. Bennet Burleigh, reached Ladysmith by way of Pretoria and Zandspruit, and travelled down in the train with the late Gen. Joubert, one of whose first remarks to him was: "The heart of my soul is bloody with sorrow." A very stirring story is this, recording of all the things that Mr. Nevinson saw. He is full of enthusiasm for our "incomparable infantry," and his pages contain many incidents illustrating the excellent qualities of the troops. Not the least interesting thing in a most successful volume is the account it gives of "How Ladysmith was Fed." Col. Ward and Col. Stoneman were not to be caught off their guard, and they knew that hunger was more cruel than the sword. At the beginning of November there were in Ladysmith 20,000 souls, with 9,800 horses and mules, and 2,500 oxen and a few hundred sheep, and, except for a few cattle captured, nothing in the way of supplies was brought in for 119 days. Cols. Ward and Stoneman had had an enormous quantity of stores sent up from the base, and large supplies were also requisitioned. The highest price reached for eggs was £2 10s. for 12, but they were often sold at from 30s. to 44s. a dozen. An official of the Natal Government Railways had 36 tins of condensed milk, for which 6s. 6d. a tin was offered at the market, but he declined to part with them at anything less than 7s. 6d. a tin, whereupon Col. Stoneman requisitioned the whole at 10d. a tin. The system of requisitioning was conducted with great tact, but when the vendors were unduly extortionate they received lessons of this kind.

The lowest meat ration for Europeans was 1 lb., with a quarter of a pound of biscuit, 3 ozs. of maize meal, and small quantities of coffee or tea, and condiments. Many other interesting particulars are contained in a book which we commend to every reader.

Ladysmith via Pretoria is the title of Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill's volume (Longmans). No correspondent in the field has had more stirring experiences than Mr. Churchill, and none could have described them better. It may be said that the correspondent of the Morning Post made his own opportunities, and perhaps even he would not have forfeited the imprisonment at Pretoria. The episode of the armoured train in which he figured so prominently is modestly told, and there is a very graphic account of the journey through the Boer camps to the railway. He discovered that the Boers were not cruel men, and he met many who made themselves quite agreeable. His great objection to being imprisoned was the sound one that he was not in Natal in a combatant capacity. He found the Boers absolutely confident that we should be defeated, and they were quite at a loss to understand why we confided our precious bodies to armoured trains. One old Boer said that if his superior officer had ordered him to go in an armoured train he should have told him to go to a more uncomfortable place. This incident is told to illustrate the idea of discipline which prevails among our enemies. One Boer spoke epigrammatically: "You English," he said, "die for your country; we Afrikanders live for ours." Another said, "We are not afraid; no matter how many thousand penny soldiers you send"; and an English Boer added, "Let 'em all come." One unhappy youth was a Scotchman commandeered, and unable, for the sake of his mother, to risk banishment from the country in which his substance lay. On the whole Mr. Churchill does not give an unfavourable picture of the treatment of the prisoners. He tells very modestly, but at the same time very vividly, the story of his escape, and the rest of the book is devoted to an account of Sir Redvers Buller's battles and of the relief of Ladysmith. He expresses opinions freely, but understands very well the difficulties that beset Sir Redvers Buller in the Natal campaign.

The Relief of Ladysmith, by John Black Atkins (Methuen) consists of correspondence addressed to the Manchester Guardian, of which we may say that it is well worth reading and is extremely instructive. In certain places Mr. Atkins has fallen into errors, but he has let them stand in order, as he curiously says, to preserve in his letters an "actuality" of which industry might have robbed them. In other words, they aim only to be pen pictures, and the reader who seeks facts must read to the end. He will certainly find the book extremely readable.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston and Co., are about to produce a valuable work Mechanical Traction in War for Road Transport, &c., with Notes on Automobiles Generally. It is by Lieut.-Col. O. Layriz, of the German Army, and is translated into English by R. B. Marston.

We can commend to those who want a good large scale map of the two Dutch Republics in South Africa the latest issue of Philip's Orange River Free State, W. and S. Frontiers, 42 miles to 1 inch (No. 1), and Durban to Pretoria on the same scale (No. 2), as supplied by George Philip and Son to the Committee of the City of London Imperial Volunteer contingent. They are contoured, well defined, and coloured, with information as to distances, populations, roads, rail, &c., are capital companions in the field and equally useful in the study for those who follow the marches of the troops and the positions of the belligerents, and the price, 2s. 6d. for each part, is very moderate.

It has been notified from the War Office that no officers of embodied Militia will be permitted to resign their commissions during embodiment, except on account of ill-health, certified after inquiry by a medical board.

SUBMERGIBLE BOATS.

IF the reports from Washington are true the United States Naval authorities have not only decided to buy the Holland submarine, or submergible, torpedo-boat, but intend to order others like her. It is asserted that Admiral Dewey supports this action on the part of the Government, and that he has stated his opinion that if the Spaniards had been in possession of craft of this description at Manila he would have been unable to take his squadron into the bay. We cannot believe that Admiral Dewey has expressed any such opinion, and we feel perfectly certain that, if there had been submergible boats in the bay, Admiral Dewey, like Farragut on another occasion, would have risked them and gone on. If the United States Naval authorities are going to pin their faith to "Plongeurs" and "Gymnotes," then the blunder they are making is not only stupid but likely to cost them dear. It is not a question whether a vessel can or can not be made submergible, for that the former is the case has been proved many times. There were submarine boats nearly two hundred and fifty years ago, but our knowledge of them is so vague that we cannot say for certain whether they were moved under water or not. But early in this century there were many experiments more or less successful in this direction, and by the time of the American Civil War boats which could be both submerged and moved under water were used and operated by both the combatants. During the last forty years improvements in almost every direction save one have been continuous, and, except that they have not yet been able to solve the problem of submarine navigation, there is hardly any element of usefulness in their mechanism which the inventors have not been able to supply. Up to the present time, however, the largest vessel of this description and class which has been constructed is about the size of a torpedo-boat destroyer, and it is evident, therefore, that her range of action is not particularly extensive. But owing to the fact that they have no reserve of buoyancy, and are very crank on the longitudinal axis, the tendency is rather to make them smaller than larger, and thus to reduce still further their powers of offence. The objection, however, to this class of vessel is primarily strategical. They may be of use to the Power which, navally speaking, must refrain from taking the offensive, but are of no value at all to a Power like Great Britain, which, in a Naval war, must assume that all salt water covers territory to be defended. The other day it was reported that the United States proposed to fortify the Nicaragua Canal. This is on a par with buying submergible torpedo-boats. In regard to this matter, however, Britain, with her Brennan torpedo, cannot afford to throw stones.

During the last few weeks the Spectator has taken up the cudgels for the so-called "submarines," and its lead has been followed by many faddists, busy-bodies, and interested persons. The agitation takes the shape generally of a demand that the Admiralty should experiment in the construction of this kind of craft. It is to be sincerely hoped that Mr. Goschen will not allow himself to be coerced in this matter, either by the denunciations of the Spectator and its correspondents, nor by the persuasive methods of Mr. Edmund Robertson. The late Civil Lord, in an article in the Nineteenth Century, thinks that it is time some official pronouncement should be made on this subject, and he is apparently apprehensive lest the views of the professional advisers at the Admiralty should have changed since he was in office, and now receive insufficient attention. We feel quite certain that he has no cause for alarm on this point. It is not the civilian officials who stand in the way, but the Navy at large, and the naval officers representing the Service on the Board. There is a very important detail lacking in the letters and articles of the agitators. We are not told to what use the "submarines" can be put. It is assumed that they will have a use, but this is just the point upon which we should like some proof. Naturally enough, we find Mr. Arnold Forster in the thick of the fray, and going for authority like a bull at a gate. His demand for the "submarine," or, as we should prefer to call it, the submergible boat, is like that of a man who, not content with the services of the police and the use of bolts and bars and electrical alarms for the protection of his property, must needs provide himself also with a complete set of burglars' implements. Because the housebreaker carries a bunch of skeleton keys and a jemmy, that does not seem to us a sound reason why the householder should also want them. Mr. Arnold Forster also makes the extraordinary statement that such boats "can be safely and certainly navigated under water." And then he adds, "their perfecting is merely a question of time." To deny this would be presumptuous, but after 200 years' trial there has not been the slightest symptom of an advance in this direction. The navigation of the air vessel is practically years ahead of navigation under water.

Mr. Arnold Forster assumes further that our battleships and cruisers are not provided with defence against the attack of the submergible boat. What, then, does he consider the role of the destroyer if this be not its function? As at present constructed the submergible boat must be brought to the surface in order that its captain may see which way to steer. Once below the water and it is blind, for we cannot regard as practical the suggestion that the boat should be accompanied by a tender connected with it by a telephone, through which directions for steering might be sent. But only partially submerged, and the "submarine" at once loses its invisibility—the single advantage which can be claimed for it. It is then at the mercy of the more speedy and better armed destroyer. We have already described what would happen then, but here is a picture from an American pen which fills in the details with graphic fluency:—

"Let us suppose that a submarine, coming like a thief in the night, has been detected on rising to the surface, and is attacked by the destroyers of the enemy. Guided by its phosphorescent wake, the destroyers, with vastly superior speed, can rapidly close up with it, ready, should it come to the surface, to disable it by a storm of rapid-fire projectiles aimed at the conning tower, while the submarine, suspecting the presence, but not knowing the position of its enemies, continues its blind course for the shelter of its coast batteries. Sooner or later, the torpedo of the destroyer, set for a deep run, dives to its mark. Then follows the muffled explosion and upheaved torrent of water, and then—the silence of black night, with only the rising bubbles to terribly suggest the passing of the souls of the brave men in their iron coffin below. It is the battle of the sword-fish and the whale; but, alas! the poor whale is blind. And yet there will always be found, among men trained from boyhood to 'seek honour at the cannon's mouth,' many, not only willing, but anxious for such service."

Britain's reply to the submergible boat of her possible enemies is not to be found in similar vessels, but, as in the case of the torpedo boat, in destroyers capable of dealing with them when they come to the surface. Here is an opportunity for the Navy League to fulfil its educational function. The country cannot too often or too strenuously be told that money devoted to the purpose of experimental construction in this direction will not only be wasted, but must mean a loss of efficiency in the effective fleet.

Navv Notes.

Mr. Goschen, in responding for the Navy, at the Royal Academy banquet the other day, remarked that he would not dilate on the courage, resourcefulness, or other qualities of our Naval Brigades. The nation had acclaimed them and the Sovereign with her own lips had testified to their deeds. He turned for one moment to another sign of the character of the men composing them. They are the representatives of the Service at large, they know themselves to be such, and in their minds is present the honour of the Service at large. This has been the keynote of the modest and sailor-like speech of Captain Lambton, "Any of our fellows would have done as well." Speaking of the contingents sent to the front from the various ships he, Mr. Goschen, referred to the Doris having landed one of the most gallant boys that ever lived, Midshipman C. A. E. Huddart, who charging up the hill at Graspan continued to advance after he had been twice wounded, and at last fell mortally hurt at the moment of victory. He mentioned that one name on account of the youth and the sad death of that young hero. But the records of the campaign are full of similar acts of gallantry on the part of blue-jackets and marines. As they had fought on shore, so, if the call should come, they would fight and work on their own element, the sea, for Queen and country and their own noble Service.

Although probably due to an oversight, it will scarcely fail to appear ungraciously to the officers and men of the Doris, Forte, Terrible and other ships which have sent brigades to the front, that so little notice should have been taken of their share in the operations in the many speeches which have been made in connection with the reception of the Powerfuls. Still more strange is it that we should find Captain Percy Scott's name omitted on these occasions, since, if it had not been for the designer of the gun carriages the Naval Brigades would have been robbed of the greater part of their value. In this connection no blame can be attached either to the Naval authorities themselves, or to the officers of the Powerful. Both Mr. Goschen and Captain Lambton have struck the right key in their public deliverances, the latter especially laying stress upon the point that he recognised himself and those serving under him as representatives of the Navy in general, and the brigades landed in South Africa in particular. But the public has a short memory, and it is necessary that it should be kept in recollection of the facts. We have seen no mention in the reported speeches of welcome of the names of Captain Prothero, who commanded and was wounded at Graspan; of Captain Marchant, of the Marines, who took charge on that occasion when his superior officers were killed or put out of action; of Commander de Horsey, who was afterwards with Lord Methuen; of Captain Beachcroft, who is now with Lord Roberts; or of Captain Jones and Commander Limpus, who were in charge of the Naval Brigades operating under General Buller from the battle of Colenso to the relief of Ladysmith. These officers, and those who have served under them, surely deserve recognition by their countrymen, and no one will be more anxious that they should receive it than the Powerfuls.

Captain Percy Scott and the officers and men of the Terrible have been feted by their countrymen at Singapore and Hong Kong, but we should not for this reason forget what is due to them, and especially to Captain Scott himself, by the Queen's subjects throughout the world. We read the other day in one paper a paragraph to the effect that the gun mountings reputed to be designed by Captain Scott were in reality the work of somebody else. Nothing could be further from the fact; and it is to be hoped that an opportunity may be made for officially giving to Captain Scott the credit which is his due. A bare statement of facts in connection with this matter will not be out of place at the present time. With regard to the mounting for the long 12-pr., no design was ever made on paper, it being chalked by Captain Scott on a bulkhead, and from the design thus made the carpenter and the blacksmith of the ship worked. The idea was Captain Scott's alone, and the first 12-pr. that was mounted on its field-carriage was lying idle at Simon's Bay Dockyard for three weeks, and might possibly have been there now had not a telegram from Sir George White forced the matter to attention. The next mounting was designed in a precisely similar manner, but when it was finished an officer of the Terrible was ordered to make a drawing of it in case more were wanted. The same officer was instructed to copy the design made by Captain Scott for mounting the 4.7in. on a platform. When the designs were made for mounting the 6in. and for the improved wheel mounting of the 4.7in. this officer had left the ship. Nor is it true, as we have seen it stated, that the mountings used at Ladysmith were designed by the Powerfuls. The guns taken by Captain Lambton to Ladysmith were mounted in the dockyard by dockyard labour and by carpenters from the Terrible under Captain Scott's supervision, and the mountings of the guns now with Lord Roberts and with General Buller, though they may have other ships' names painted on them, are reproductions of his designs. Save as the commandant of Durban, and in the preparations for the defence of that port, Captain Scott was not permitted to command either his men or his guns which were sent to the front, but he should not be robbed of the credit of making the designs which have had such a material effect in determining the issue of the war.

Various rumours are current in connection with the Naval Manœuvres, but up to the present moment they have none of them received confirmation. According to one story, they are to be on a much larger scale than usual, and on the return of the ships a review is to be held at Spithead in honour of the visit of the Shah of Persia. There is no official foundation for either statement, and it seems unlikely that the Admiralty will commission more ships on this occasion than in previous years. It is probable that the partial mobilisation will take place during the first week in July, and that it will be mainly confined so far as the Reserve is concerned to cruisers and small craft. The only battleship now in the dockyard which might be brought forward is the Glory. There is no indication, however, at present, that this vessel will hoist the pennant. As we have already pointed out, special arrangements for the manœuvres have been made in regard to colliers and distilling vessels, and special interest will attach to the utilisation of these accessories.

It is particularly interesting that Mr. Goschen should have taken advantage of his reply for the Navy at the Iron and Steel Institute to answer the French criticism of our guns. We have already explained the mistakes made by M. Claudinon in reference to this matter, and how this gentleman had misled Sir Charles Dilke; but it is in every way more satisfactory that the repudiation should come from the First Lord himself. M. Claudinon did not give his autho-riety; but he stated that in June last the Mars, Resolution, Hannibal, and Jupiter tried their new guns, the fact being that the Resolution had no such guns as M. Claudinon was criticising, and that the experiments in June were not for the purpose of trying the guns at all, but of the system of supplying ammunition. M. Claudinon also said that out of sixteen wire guns which were then tried three had burst and ten had started their parts. Mr. Goschen states that the whole of this allegation is a fable. Not one gun has burst, and not one has started. Dealing with the charge against British guns—that they are deficient in muzzle velocity, and on that account inferior to the French guns—Mr. Goschen said:—

"The energy of a shot fired from a gun depended on two factors, the velocity and the weight of the projectile. The consideration of the weight of the projectile had been omitted in the whole of the controversy with regard to French and British guns. The question, which was known to all artillerymen, was—'Which is better, to have much velocity at the muzzle, with a flat trajectory, but with a lighter projectile; or to have smaller velocity, but with a projectile which has greater impact when it strikes the object at which it is aimed, and a greater destructive bursting charge?' As we had been reproached with having less velocity at the muzzle than the French, so the French had been reproached by their own people for having so light a projectile compared with the English. Our projectile would be heavier when it struck a ship; it would hit harder, and the bursting charge would be more destructive than the French. Comparing the latest model of the English 12in. gun with the latest French gun of the same bore, we find that the weight of the English shell was 850lb.; the French shell weighed only 644lb., and had a higher muzzle velocity, but it hit with less weight and power than our own. At the moment of leaving the muzzle, the English projectile commenced to be superior to the French in energy, and struck a heavier blow at the end, and the explosive effect of our shell was far greater than that of the French. This method has been deliberately adopted by the British artillerymen, and they had been followed by the United States, Japan, and other countries."

The Explosives Committee, the appointment of which was foreshadowed by the First Lord of the Admiralty at the Iron and Steel banquet, has been constituted as follows:—Lord Rayleigh (chairman), Sir Andrew Noble, Mr. Haldane, M.P., Sir W. Roberts-Austen, Sir William Crookes, and Captain Tulloch (secretary). The reference to the committee is to carry out trials with a view to ascertaining the best smokeless propellants for use in existing guns of all natures and in existing small arms, and to report as to whether any modification in the existing designs of gun is desirable with a view to developing to the full the powers of any propellant which may be proposed. It will be noticed that, as usual, the Navy is without representation on this committee.

Last week Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, who has been staying with his brother, the Earl of Durham, at Lambton Castle, was presented with the freedom of the city of Durham, the deed being enclosed in a silver-gilt casket. Subsequently at the castle the honorary degree of Doctor of Civil Law of the Durham University was conferred on him. In the evening he was entertained at a banquet in the Town-hall, at which the Marquis of Londonderry presided. Afterwards he was presented by the people of the County Palatine with a silver model of a 4.7in. gun, mounted according to Captain Percy Scott's plan. A torch-light procession of university undergraduates escorted their newly elected D.C.L. to the city boundary, en route for the home of the Lambtons. The Ulster Association have invited him to a banquet at the Hotel Cecil, on the 28th inst., in honour of Lieut.-General Sir George White, V.C. The gallant officer concludes the memorable commission of the Powerful on the 8th prox., and hauls down his pennant.

When the Terrible left Singapore, the Colonial Secretary of the Straits Settlements and the Administrator of Chinese in the Malay Peninsula, took passage in her for Wei-hai-Wei, to inquire into and report on what administrative methods are necessary for our newly-acquired possession. This points to the advent of civil government under the Colonial Office. A distinguished general officer went to Shanghai in the eighties to inspect the Volunteer force, and was surprised at the excellent method of administration by the merchants of the British Settlement. He attributed their success to being clear of Downing Street! Wei-hai-Wei cannot be governed like the Shanghai Settlement, but, as it is purely a naval base, it should be largely under Admiralty control, and there should be no interference by a civil administrator.

THE SIEGE OF LADYSMITH.

Lieut. A. W. Heneage, of the Powerful, returned thanks for the Navy at the Fishmongers' banquet on Wednesday. He said:—

"I feel that it is an honour, the greatest honour that could be paid to anyone of my age, to be called upon to reply in an assembly such as this, for such an enormous service as Her Majesty's Navy. The reason why I am called now to reply for the Navy is that I had the greatest good fortune, in common with all my brother officers of the Powerful who were in Ladysmith, to be there during the siege. We considered ourselves, from the day when we got into the train on Oct. 30 until the day of the relief, and, indeed, until the present moment, the luckiest of Her Majesty's servants. We were lucky in many ways. We had the honour to belong to a Service which is accustomed to handle very heavy guns. Besides that, we had the good fortune to serve under such an able and far-seeing captain, who understood what is required, and not only that, but was, I believe, the only officer who foretold that the siege would last till Easter. We took up a certain amount of ammunition and guns—as much as we could in a hurry in accordance with the orders of the Admiral—and Capt. Lambton with his foresight ordered us to economise our ammunition to the utmost. The result was that we were able to render some slight service to Sir Geo. White. Again, we had the great good fortune to see our sister service in the field, and to see with what great gallantry our sister service can behave when the country calls upon it. Personally I had never seen cavalry or artillery on active service before. I had seen some of the other regiments on active service, but there we met representatives of all arms of Her Majesty's land service in the field and saw what they did, and with what precision and gallantry they carried out all their movements. A great deal has been said about our sufferings and our anxiety at Ladysmith, but I think all those who were with us will agree with me that we had no sufferings and no anxiety compared with those of our fellow-countrymen at home. When the first heliograph communication was established with Ladysmith we asked for news. The reply came that there was no news. This reply, although it seemed rather strange that nothing exciting had occurred during the two months that we had been locked up, reassured us that nothing alarming had been going on at home. On the other hand, you received nothing but news of disease and casualties; therefore I consider you were by far the worse off. Had you received the news that we did—no news—you would have been very much happier than you were. We received a most splendid reception in the city of London on Monday in last week, and again to-night, and all the Navy will agree with me when I say that this only convinces us of what we knew already—of the close ties that exist between the City of London and the Royal Navy. Speaking personally, I can only tell you that should it ever fall to my lot to assist in protecting the commerce of the port of London, I should be inspired to further energies by the memory of the glorious reception we have received after our small efforts in South Africa, and by the memory that the City of London fully appreciates all the efforts of those who are fighting for their Queen and country. I think the British Navy has never been so greatly honoured before as when her Majesty and the Royal Family and the City of London turned out to meet a small party who have, after all, only rendered a very small service—because, after all, it was only by the use of the guns to which we have been trained from our boyhood, and also by the position that we were placed in, that we were able to do any service at all. Officers of the Powerful, I ask you to rise and drink the health of our hosts to-night."

The Secretary of State for War has decided that the wives of all Reservists who rejoined under the provisions of Army Order 23 of 1898, and who were married at the time of rejoining, shall be treated as the wives of mobilised Reservists. If, therefore, they were not within the numbers allowed to be married under the Order, they may be allowed separation allowance for themselves and for their children from the date of mobilisation of their husbands' units. If their husbands continue serving after demobilisation is ordered, separation allowance will not be made to them beyond the date on which it is paid to the families of mobilised Reservists of the same units.

A BOON TO OFFICERS AND MEN UPON THE BATTLEFIELD AND IN HOSPITALS.—The official Military Hospital reports, forwarded during the last War in Germany, Austria and France, prove that the pleasant, slightly stimulating, strengthening qualities of the World-known and celebrated HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT, exercise a very beneficial influence upon the health and recovery of the wounded soldiers. Do, therefore, not fail to send your gallant warriors in SOUTH AFRICA a fore, quantity of this MALT, which is so popular in the highest circles of England, and has been used by Members of the ROYAL FAMILY, and is manufactured by M. HOFF, of HAMBURG. Beware of imitation, and see that the label carries the name of M. HOFF. Refuse any other but this one sold by LEOPOLD HOFF, 29, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

Navv Personal.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales distributes the prizes at the Royal Naval School, Eltham, on the 16th prox.

The Duke of York presided on Tuesday last at the annual court of the Royal Humane Society, and was supported by Admirals Sir Erasmus Ommanney, Sir George Willes, and E. S. Adeane, and Vice-Admirals G. D. Morant and Sir Compton Domville. On the previous evening His Royal Highness honoured Lord Belper and the Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms with his presence at dinner.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Henry Keppel in his recent visit to the Far East did not reach our principal naval station, Hong Kong. He was Commander-in-Chief in China from 1867-69, and his portrait, with that of his junior colleague of the same period, the late Commodore Oliver Jones, are in the Hong Kong Club.

Admiral Sir John O. Hopkins presides at the annual dinner of the Navy League, to be held on Tuesday next at the Trocadero.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, accompanied by his flag captain, Sir Richard Poore, Bart., dined with Colonel F. Baldwin, Commandant, and the officers of the Plymouth Division Royal Marine Light Infantry, on Thursday in last week.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, Commanding the Channel Squadron and the rear-admiral, captains, and officers serving under him were the guests of the Corporation of Glasgow on Friday in last week. In responding to the toast of the Navy, proposed by the Lord Provost, the gallant vice-admiral referred with pride to the conduct of the Naval Brigade in South Africa, and was sure that what had been done by them would be performed willingly by any members of the Naval Service. Sir Harry, while asserting that he was not a politician, considered that we required a very strong Navy, and twenty-eight millions were but a small premium for insuring the safety and welfare of our vast Empire. But we had not enough battle-ships and required many more cruisers. Everyone will agree with him that Nelson's cry, "more frigates," is echoed in the present day by those who urge that we are short of cruiser auxiliaries to our line of battle. The Channel Squadron arrived at Spithead on Tuesday evening last.

Rear-Admiral L. A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Squadron, arrived at Esquimalt on Sunday last in the Warspite. The defects in his flagship's machinery will not, apparently, necessitate her return to England. This gallant flag officer attains the age of fifty-three to-day.

Rear-Admirals J. H. Bainbridge and the Hon. Victor Montagu, Captain F. C. Bridgeman, flag-captain at Portsmouth, and Lieutenant W. N. Diggle (retired) were present last Saturday at the annual meeting of the Royal Yacht Squadron, held this year at Boodle's Club, when the following naval officers were elected honorary members:—Vice-Admiral Sir C. E. Domville, Commanders Lionel Wells, D. Hamond-Græme (Coast guard, Cowes), and C. E. Anson, of the Royal yacht, Osborne.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, of the Mediterranean Fleet, arrived at Malta from Corfu on Tuesday last.

Rear-Admiral J. Lacon Hammett reached the age of fifty-two on Tuesday last, and will not probably be compulsorily retired for the next eighteen years.

Captain W. Osborne Moore has not, we learn, retired from active service; and we regret that we should have been inadvertently led into stating the contrary by a correspondent.

Captain Anson Schomberg, having paid off the Victorious at Malta, and transferred his officers and ship's company to the Revenge, left on Wednesday for Chatham in the latter vessel, the captain, officers, and crew of which re-commissioned the Victorious.

Captain H.S.H. Prince Louis of Battenberg completes his forty-sixth year of age on the anniversary of her Majesty's birthday.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, has been presented by Her Majesty with a gold watch with the Royal monogram and "Ladysmith, 1900" inscribed thereon.

Captain H. Leah, of the Diana, left Sydney, N.S.W., on Saturday last for Devonport, with paid-off crews from the Australian command.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, with relief crews for Australia, left Colombo for Albany, W.A., on Monday last, after a stay of five days, and will, if necessary, call at Batavia for coal. Delay occurred at Malta in consequence of remedies to the engines suggested by the Admiralty official, Chief Inspector of Machinery J. A. Bedbrook, who was specially embarked to overlook their working, and her stoppage at Ceylon is probably due to further adjustments becoming necessary.

Captain Ernest J. Fleet, of the Edgar, left Aden for Plymouth on Sunday last with relieved crews from China.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, whose serious accident shortly before the departure of the Europa last month, necessitated his supersession, is now, we are glad to say, approaching recovery at the Royal Hospital, Haslar.

Staff-Captain P. D. Oules, of the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, has been obliged to resign his command in consequence of ill-health, and will shortly retire. He is succeeded by Staff-Captain H. E. Wood, of the Glory, who we congratulate on securing an independent appointment.

Commander E. L. Lang pays off the Polyphemus on the 31st inst., but does not turn over with his crew to the Pyramus on the following day, Commander J. M. de Robeck having been detailed to commission the latter cruiser. Commander Lang has been nearly two and a-half years in command of the former vessel and is of six years' seniority, but unfortunately beyond the usual age for promotion.

The late Commander F. G. Egerton, who gloriously fell at Ladysmith, is referred to in a most feeling and appreciative manner by Sir George Otto Trevelyan in the Times of Saturday last, in regard to the gallant deceased's admission to the Service, of which he was such a valuable representative. It appears that his father, the late Admiral the Hon. Francis Egerton, obtained a nomination for his son on the eve almost of the examination for naval cadetships. Although he came from a private school, and had no opportunity for special preparation, he passed into the Britannia high on the list of successful candidates. Sir George, a former Secretary of the Admiralty, mentions this in reference to a recent assertion, that if a boy's parents wish him to pass into the naval cadets' training school they must send him to a "crammer."

Lieut.-Commander Hon. G. A. Hardinge of the Rattler, reached Aden from Colombo on Sunday last, and was to leave for Sheerness the following Tuesday. He made a very good passage across the Indian Ocean at a period generally unpleasant for small vessels.

Lieutenant Bertram Thesiger, Staff Officer of the Excellent, commands the Naval Brigade at the Royal Military Tournament in the Agricultural Hall, which was opened yesterday by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

Lieutenant M. H. Hodges of the Powerful's Naval Brigade, who was invalidated from Ladysmith, and had the misfortune to miss the reception of his captian, brother officers, and comrades by the good people of Portsmouth, reached his home at Dorchester late on Thursday in last week, and was most enthusiastically received. The Mayor welcomed him on behalf of his fellow-townsmen.

Chaplain Rev. Samuel Shone, LL.D., recently transferred to Portsmouth Dockyard from the Royal Marine Light Infantry Division at Gosport, where he served upwards of four years, has been presented by the sergeants of that headquarters with a marble timepiece.

Inspector of Machinery J. A. Smith, who for the past twelve months has been attached to the Channel Fleet for special duty, and recently appointed temporarily to the Crescent, has left for Bermuda to endeavour to remedy the defects in the engines of the Hermes, which cruiser arrived there on the 9th inst. It will be remembered she had a serious breakdown off the Bahamas early in this year and the Crescent was despatched to tow her to Bermuda for repair, although, as we remarked at the time, it would have been more advantageous had she been taken to the better-equipped naval establishment she has recently reached.

Fleet-Engineers (retired) James Carlisle and G. F. Ball have been awarded the additional Greenwich Hospital pensions for engineer officers sanctioned by Order in Council January 29 last. Mr. Carlisle had a pleasurable career of active service. He joined in 1853, and was promoted Chief Engineer eight years afterwards—an unusually short period of junior service. From 1875 to 1883 he served on the Royal yacht Alberta.

Naval Instructor A. C. Johnstone succeeds to the Greenwich Hospital Pension held by the late Naval-Instructor H. A. Speed, on whom it was conferred nearly thirty-four years ago.

Surgeon B. S. Parish, invalided from Malta hospital, arrived home on Friday in last week by the P. and O. steamship Thames.

Paymaster F. W. Osburn, of the Pegasus, returns from the South-East Coast of America to become Secretary to Rear-Admiral A. B. Jenkins of the Channel Fleet. As the appointment is only for a year the advantage to him is inconsiderable, placing aside having to defray the cost of his passage home; while the public are put to the expense of sending another officer to relieve him.

Lemco

(Liebig Company's Extract.)

ON THE BATTLE FIELD

The quantity of Liebig Company's Extract (now labelled Lemco) already supplied to the British Forces and the Red Cross and Yeomanry Hospitals in South Africa is sufficient to provide

BREAKFAST CUPS.

This quantity represents the product of a herd of 5,000 Bullocks.

Navy Foreign.

The "Affaire Philipp" has come to a miserable end. It is naval only, in that the victim is a naval official. The unfortunate functionary of the Ministry of Marine who is supposed to have attempted to divulge, or rather, to have been willing to divulge, secrets concerning French national defences to this country, has been condemned to pay a penalty of 1,000 francs and to suffer imprisonment for four years. The whole story savours a good deal of the Dreyfus case, even to the intervention of the "veiled lady." On January 12, a miserable wretch, Philipp's emissary, appeared at the gate of the British Embassy with a dirty envelope. It was intercepted by one Dameron, son-in-law of the hall porter, who, scenting something mysterious about it, and thinking he could check an "act of treason" against the Boers, communicated the letter four days later to M. Marcel Hutin, a journalist who had published certain interviews with Dr. Leyds. Information concerning the mysterious letter, of which we believe the contents have not been divulged, was also communicated to M. Fontin, librarian at the Ministry of Marine, who thought it his duty to inform M. Bonheure, chief of the Minister's Cabinet, concerning it. Dameron and Hutin then had an interview with Dr. Leyds, who was then in Paris, and who expressed the opinion that Philipp was a swindler attempting to extort money, for he had never been in the service of the Transvaal. Dameron, however, was curiously anxious to know if a creature who was willing to betray the Transvaal might not also be willing to betray France, and therefore, under a false name, he arranged a meeting between Philipp and his wife, who was supposed to be an emissary of the British Embassy. Philipp told her that he had valuable information in his possession, which resulted, he said, from a mission confided to him by Dr. Leyds, and not from his position at the Ministry of Marine; and that it was the embarrassment of his affairs that caused him to approach the British Embassy. At the same time he indignantly declared that he would never betray his country. The Correctional Tribunal, recognising that Philipp was mystified by Madame Dameron, who was closely veiled, "as is proper in such circumstances," and that his position at the Ministry of Marine made a severe punishment necessary, the more so because four days before he wrote to the British Embassy he had expressed to Dr. Leyds his hatred of Englishmen, condemned him to the penalties described. It, therefore, falls to Rear-Admiral Nabona and a committee to decide whether Philipp shall also be degraded from his position on the Civil Establishment of the Navy.

It would appear that the German battleships of modern construction are all to receive the names of rulers of the Holy Roman Empire or of its modern German successor. The latest to be launched, which recently took the water at Herr Schichau's Yard at Danzig, has received the name of Kaiser Barbarossa, from the famous ruler about whose memory so many Teutonic legends have gathered. She is a sister ship of the Friedrich III., Wilhelm II., Wilhelm der Grosse, and Karl der Grosse. There are certain individual differences between these ships, but they are all upon the same plan, displacing about 11,000 tons, with a length of 377ft., 65ft. 8in. beam, and 25ft. 8in. draught. They are heavily protected by Harveyed nickel-steel belts, with a maximum thickness of nearly 12in., 10in. upon the turrets, and a 3in. deck; and they carry four 9.4in. guns, described according to the German classification as quick-firers, eighteen 5.9in. quick-firers, twelve 3.3in., and twelve 1.4in., with eight machine guns; and there are six torpedo-tubes of which five submerge. Engines of 13,000 horse-power, supplied by water-tube boilers, and driving three screws, are to give a speed of eighteen knots. The normal coal supply is 650 tons, but the bunker capacity is 1,000 tons. The complement of the ships is about 700.

The question of the wisdom or unwisdom of the double or super-imposed turrets which have been placed in the American battleships, Kearsarge and Kentucky, is not settled by the recent trials of the former. The introduction of this form of construction was mainly due to Admiral Sampson, and it was not carried into force without raising great opposition. The turrets of the Kearsarge work well, but in the nature of things a mechanical success does not throw any light upon the advisability of uniting four guns in a single position. Rear-Admiral Highborn, the chief constructor, is very strongly opposed to the super-imposed turret, and he has presented a report in which he remarks that the American ships answered very well in the war with Spain, but that he is afraid such might not have been the case if they had possessed the new feature. As a matter of fact, no other Power has followed in the wake of the Americans in this matter, and their own new battleships do not reproduce the features of the Kearsarge. It is true that in the latest class the Navy Department has left it open to alter the disposition of armament which had been decided upon, and it will be very curious to see whether the trials of the Kearsarge suffice to bring round the heads of the Department to views from which they have so far dissented. There is not much likelihood that such will be the case.

STAFF SERVICE OF MEDICAL OFFICERS. TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In the annual "Army List," under the heading "Staff Service for Surgeons-General," page 142, the only officers of that rank stated to have any are those few who have been, or are, employed in the War Office; but the medical regulations, paragraph nine, indicates that principal medical officers appointed to districts and commands, or with troops in the field, are on the staff of the Army. May I, therefore, through your columns, invite the attention of the authorities to the manifest omission, not only as regards surgeons-general, but also in the case of colonels of the Royal Army Medical Corps.

SURGEON-GENERAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In view of the practical assistance afforded by the Colonies in the present war, it will be interesting to watch the "Honours Gazette" on the Queen's Birthday, when probably, as usual, the men who raised those forces will be conspicuous by their absence from the list.

ADMIRAL KENNEDY'S REMINISCENCES.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

HURRAH FOR THE LIFE OF A SAILOR! FIFTY YEARS IN THE ROYAL NAVY.

By VICE-ADMIRAL SIR WILLIAM KENNEDY, K.C.B.,

Author of "Sport, Travel, and Adventure in Newfoundland and the West Indies." With numerous Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

"Sir William Kennedy, in addition to his other qualifications, is an admirable story-teller, and repeats his yarns with a fine healthy unconsciousness which is charming. From beginning to end the book is delightful....One continued succession of anecdotes, adventures, experiences, hare-brained frolics, or more serious bits of work, which, better than any book we remember, portrays the bright side of a naval officer's life."—ATHENEUM.

"It is impossible to resist the spirit of this vivacious book.....There is a curious vivid actuality about his story-telling.....No book could be less bookish in style, or more natural, easy and spontaneous."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"His narrative is rich with long experience of active service, full of shrewd observation of men and manners in many lands, and it sparkles with frank enjoyment of what has fallen to his share.....This is the kind of book that puts every wholesome reader in the best of humour."—SIR HERBERT MAXWELL in the DAILY MAIL.

"Sir William Kennedy's book is a pearl of price. Bright with humour, gay wisdom is found on every page.....Altogether this is a most delightful book."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Among the most interesting and amusing books of its kind.....Written with an unsophisticated freshness and a sense of humour which keeps us either in laughter or on the tiptoe of expectation."—STANDARD.

"No more cheery, vivid, and amusing series of sketches of life and adventure on shipboard has seen the light."—SCOTSMAN.

WHAT IS TROPON?

WHAT IS TROPON?

TROPON is a natural pure albumen, prepared after the method of Professor Finkler, M.D., of the University of Bonn.
TROPON is the ESSENCE OF LIFE. It almost immediately relieves prostration and REVITALIZES THE ENTIRE SYSTEM.
TROPON is the only real food for the Healthy and Invalids, for Consumptives, and all suffering from Wasting Diseases, for those afflicted with Gout, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Albuminuria, &c.
TROPON is immediately absorbed and perfectly digested and transformed into blood and muscles. It is absolutely tasteless and odourless. It can be taken in its original form or as TropoN Biscuits, TropoN Rusks, or TropoN Chocolate.
TROPON is tolerated by even the weakest system.
TROPON is used in thousands of hospitals in Great Britain and abroad, and is prescribed by many thousands of doctors.

"THE TIMES," in its issue of September 5, says, under "Naval and Military Intelligence," referring to a report published in Kolnische Zeitung, with regard to an experiment made in the German Army with a new food for soldiers called "TropoN":—

"Twenty-five non-commissioned officers and men volunteered for the experiment and were placed under the command of a lieutenant. Each man received three days' rations of TropoN rusks, TropoN chocolate, TropoN bean and pea soup. During three days the men were to march, in full marching order, thirty kilometres each day, and to sleep at night in the open air.
 "A TropoN ration for three days weighs 1,200 grammes, whereas the ordinary ration of solid food of the German soldier weighs 1,950 grammes. The TropoN ration is also cheaper in proportion to the amount of nourishment it contains. The men found the TropoN food easy of digestion, and it kept them in good condition."

Sold by all leading Chemists and Stores.

COLONEL VILLEBOIS MAREUIL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—All of us here feel indebted to you for your remarks on the raising a monument to Colonel Villebois Mareuil by Lord Methuen. It was a chivalrous and manly thing to do. The same kind action was done by the Boers at Coleskop, when they put headstones over the graves of two of our men.—Vide Times. Those who object to Lord Methuen's act would object to anything.

THE RELIEF OF MAFEKING.

THE anticipations respecting the relief of Mafeking, to which we gave expression in our last issue, were speedily realised. On the 18th inst., a Renter's telegram reached London from Pretoria, which was couched in these terms:—"It is officially announced that when the laagers and forts around Mafeking had been severely bombarded, the siege was abandoned by the Boers. A British force advancing from the south then took possession of the town." The message that brought the welcome news within an hour or so of midnight on Friday last, although emanating from a Boer source, contained internal evidence of its truth, and was at once accepted. Official confirmation, placing the matter beyond all doubt, arrived from Lord Roberts on Monday afternoon. As a fitting accompaniment to the good news came the announcement of the promotion of Colonel Baden-Powell to the rank of Major-General, a prompt and well-merited recognition of military service of exceptional brilliancy. The accounts of the relief show that the operation from start to finish was a bold and dashing exploit, admirably planned, and successfully carried out with the utmost rapidity, adroitness, and secrecy. A flying column, commanded by Colonel Mahon, 8th Hussars, well-known for his service in connection with the defeat and death of the Khalifa, started north from Barkly West on the 4th inst., under cover of the passage of the Vaal at Windsorton, by General Hunter on the same date. Its strength was about 2,300, comprising Imperial Yeomanry, Imperial Light Horse, Diamond Fields Horse, Kimberley Horse, and Royal Horse Artillery, besides "pom-poms" and Maxims, with picked men of the Irish Fusilier Brigade, a train of waggons taking supplies to the starving town. On the 7th, Taungs, seventy miles to the north, was reached, and on the 9th Vryburg, forty miles further on. A detour to the west was made to avoid a Boer force at Pudimoe Siding ten miles north of Taungs. On the 13th, while making a wide sweep to the west by Setlagoli to elude a commando approaching from Maritsani Station, the column was heavily attacked near Kraaipan, on ground thickly covered with bush, but after a brisk engagement repulsed the enemy, and proceeded on its way. Two days later the forces of Colonels Mahon and Plumer joined hands at Janmsibi, twenty-five miles west of Mafeking, but their combined advance on the town was barred by 1,500 Boers strongly posted nine miles due west of the investing lines. A fierce engagement ensued on the 16th, which lasted for many hours, but resulted in the complete defeat of the enemy, who retreated to the east, leaving the way to Mafeking open. A detachment of Canadian artillery arriving on the field by forced marches contributed to the enemy's discomfiture. Thus ended an ineffectual siege of over seven months, during which the Boers had vainly used every effort in their power to crush the little garrison. On the morning of the 7th, Colonel Mahon, eluding the enemy by a night march, entered the town with his victorious troops, having covered from Greefputs, the point of starting, 223 miles in ten days. The actual daily rate of marching on several days was twenty-five miles, and on one day thirty-five. This sustained effort was borne well by both men and animals, notwithstanding the constant high rate of speed, and at times an almost total absence of water.

On the 12th, as the flying column sped upon its way, Mafeking was fiercely assaulted, for the last time, with an audacity unusual with the Boers. Before daylight Commandant Eloff, said to be President Kruger's grandson, with some 300 men rushed the eastern pickets along the Molopo valley, and stormed the native town which they set on fire. Their further progress into the enceinte was barred by the defences, but a fort held by Colonel Hore with a small party was attacked and overpowered. The garrison of the town, rallying on both flanks, closed in upon the rear of the assailants, and a desperate fight at short range, which lasted throughout the day, ensued. In the end Eloff, deserted by some of his force, surrendered with 120 men and some officers, many Frenchmen and Germans being among the prisoners. This crowning success at the close of the siege was a fitting termination to the magnificent defence that will ever be coupled with the name of Baden-Powell, and which has added fresh lustre and prestige to British arms.

No events in the war, now—as we believe—approaching its close, will stand out more conspicuously than the heroic defence of Ladysmith, Kimberley, and Mafeking. Opinions will differ, no doubt, as to the wisdom of holding those places, judging from the point of view of strictly correct strategy. There will be little difference of opinion, however, as to the almost certainty that their abandonment would have largely increased the enemy's power of inflicting perhaps irreparable loss upon our Colonies in the early stages of the war, and there can be none at all as to the magnificent valour, endurance, and resourcefulness of the three beleaguered garrisons and their brilliant commanders, while the British flag was kept triumphantly flying in the face of approaching famine, unceasing bombardment, and the deadly depression that comes of daily diminishing hope. The time test of endurance places Mafeking, with its 217 days of investment to May 17, ahead of the other two. Kimberley, with its large population, held out bravely for 123 days. Ladysmith, where the danger of capture by assault, or of succumbing to famine was perhaps greater, endured its trials for 118 days. The investment and defence of these places belong now to history, as well as the manner of their relief. Neither the famous flank march setting Kimberley free and entrapping Cronje, the series of sanguinary encounters on the Tugela leading up to the glorious battle of Pieter's Hill, which opened the gates of Ladysmith, nor the dash to the north to raise the siege of Mafeking will soon be forgotten. With characteristic promptness General Baden-Powell, on the day of his release, united his force with the relieving columns, and a combined attack was made on the enemy's head laager, which was heavily shelled and abandoned with its stores and ammunition. The Boer forces, with the exception of one commando, apparently left to cover the retreat, dispersed in various directions. After a halt of ten days at Kroonstad for the repair of the railway and the formation of a new depôt of supply, Lord Roberts on Tuesday left a division there to guard the place, and resumed his forward movement. He reached Honings' Spruit, twenty-three miles north, on the same day. On Tuesday, also, General Ian Hamilton, working up from Lindley, driving De Wet before him, entered Heilbron, thirty-five miles north-east of Honing's Spruit, after a series of engagements. General French, in advance of Lord Roberts's left, was then across the Rhenoster river, some ten miles west of the main line of advance. By these rapid forward movements the enemy's entrenched positions along the north bank of the Rhenoster were effectually turned on both flanks, and on his arrival at the south bank of the river on Wednesday morning Lord Roberts ascertained that the enemy had fled during the night. General French at once pushed on to Prospect, five miles north, General Hamilton advancing on the right.

By the relief of Mafeking Lord Roberts's strategy has been freed at length from the disturbing element due to the necessity of subordinating his general plans, to some extent at least, to the release of invested garrisons at outlying and inconvenient points. Henceforth the campaign can proceed with undisturbed regularity and despatch, the various columns co-operating as directed from the centre by the master mind of the Commander-in-Chief. Four columns may, if required, now converge on Pretoria and Johannesburg. With the main army advancing from the south, supported to the east by the Natal Army Corps, to the west by a column operating along the Vaal, and further north by a fourth force striking due east from Mafeking, any commandos the enemy can place in the field should be quickly swept aside, and the Transvaal capital brought within sight in a time that might now almost be reckoned by days. When he reached the Rhenoster River Lord Roberts was not more than 110 miles from Pretoria.

Sir Redvers Buller has been for some days detained at Newcastle owing to the extensive damage to the railway. He has had, unfortunately, to report the loss of a squadron of Bethune's Horse, ambushed by the enemy between the northern border of Zululand and Vryheid, where the country is very favourable to Boer tactics. Laing's Nek and Botha's Pass are stated to be held in force. On Saturday General Clery's Division encamped on the battlefield of Ingogo, twelve miles north of Newcastle, while Dundonald searched the road as far as Laing's Nek; and on Monday Buller's scouts had crossed the Buffalo River into the Transvaal. The marching powers of the troops in all quarters of the field have been remarkable. General Buller's force, operating over mountainous country, covered 138 miles, by the circuitous road taken, between the 10th inst. when Ladysmith was left, and the 18th when it reached Newcastle.

Of the remaining columns there is little fresh to record. Lord Methuen is acting along the Vaal, from Hoopstad, on Lord Roberts's extreme left. Sir Leslie Rundle and General Brabant in the south-east are still manoeuvring against the disorganised commandos holding the country between Ficksburg and Bethlehem. The Boers there are being steadily pushed to the north. Ladybrand and Clocolan are now securely held by the British, and Ficksburg was, on Thursday, reported clear of the enemy. General Hunter is engaged in repairing and opening the western railway to Mafeking. Sir Charles Warren has been on the move and has taken the town of Douglas, inflicting loss on a rebel commando. Of Sir Frederick Carrington nothing has been heard recently, but at the proper time he will doubtless appear on the Transvaal border from the north, when it may fall to his lot to play an important part in the closing scenes of the war.

RAILWAYS IN WAR.

THE campaign in South Africa presents an instructive lesson to the military student in the use of railways in war. One of the characteristic features of modern warfare is the important part played by the iron-road. With the assistance of this grand artery of supply, it has become possible to despatch, concentrate, and maintain over a wide area, armies of a numerical strength that would be far beyond the power of any strategist to move without such means. The existence of the railway enabled the Federal States of North America, in their fratricidal struggle, to conduct and bring to a successful conclusion one of the most hardly-contested wars of modern times, at a distance of some hundreds of miles from their base of supply. On the other hand, through the absence of railways, Russia, in 1854, was unable to pour reinforcements into the Crimea in sufficient force to raise the siege of Sebastopol.

The most notable instance of the century, illustrating the strategical value of the railroad, is afforded by the Franco-German campaign of 1870. On war being declared, the order to mobilise the German forces was issued on July 15. By the 25th, all the Army Corps were mobilised, completed, and concentrated at their respective headquarters throughout the Fatherland. On the 24th of the same month all passenger traffic ceased on the railways taken up for the conveyance of the Army to the front, and in ten days the several Army Corps were entrained, transported, and placed at their respective strategical points along the frontier. Railways confer the power, as no other means of transport can, of effecting rapid concentrations, of keeping up a constant stream of supply from indefinite distances, of freeing the commanders in the front of their sick, wounded, and prisoners, and of forwarding reinforcements of all arms and materiel to make good the constant waste of war. But if the iron-road be a servant of an army in the field, whose value cannot be over-rated, it is also one that demands unremitting vigilance for its protection and maintenance. Whether in advance or in retreat, the railway inexorably decides the direction to be taken by the main forces of both combatants, and it is the swift agent that brings them into collision. Where the main lines, traversing in their course the theatre of war, cross the rivers, or form junctions, strategical points of vital importance become fixed, for the possession of which pitched battles are fought. The side that has command of the lines of rail at the opening of a campaign possesses an enormous initial advantage, and one that may go far, if properly utilised, to decide the fate of the war. In the war with the South African Republics, in which the country is now engaged, that initial advantage was held by the Boers.

From the district within which lie Pretoria and Johannesburg three main lines of rail diverge and lead directly to the sea, which they strike at Lorenzo-Marques, Durban, and Port Elizabeth. The line to the latter place takes its course to the south, Bloemfontein, the Free State capital, and throws out branches which reach the sea at Port Alfred and East London. A fourth main line, that from Bulawayo to Cape Town, lies outside the railway system of the Republics. From Pretoria a line, possibly intended eventually to reach Bulawayo, proceeds northwards to Pietersburg, a town lying within the Transvaal, 130 miles from Fort Tuli, in Rhodesia. Another length of rails, running south-west from Johannesburg to Klerksdorp, 120 miles from Vryburg, on the western line, completes the present railway system of the Transvaal. It will be seen that the Transvaal capital, the seat of government and the grand depot of supplies, has, radiating from it as a centre, several main lines affording great facilities for the despatch and concentration of commandos in various directions. It was accordingly only to be expected that, while diplomacy still dragged its slow length along, the burghers should be forwarded to their frontiers, and there massed in readiness for immediate hostilities. Both as regards sound policy and correct strategy the action of the Republics is to be commended, though in its effect it has not accomplished all that it appeared to promise. A commando was despatched to the northern frontier on the Limpopo River to watch Fort Tuli. In the east, Komati-Poort and Barberton were held on the line to Delagoa Bay. To the west, commandos took post in observation along the Cape-to-Bulawayo line, and threatened an advance at any point from Orange River station in the south, to Palachwe in the north. The Orange River border presented important points tapped by the railways, but they were for the time neglected in favour of the Natal borders, where the bulk of the commandos were massed.

The initial disposition of the burgher forces to the east and west, and also the events that have followed the opening of the campaign, have mainly resulted from the retention by the British of the advanced and isolated points of Dundee, Ladysmith, Mafeking, and Kimberley, notwithstanding that such occupation may not have been in strict accordance with the accepted rules and axioms of the military schools. The temptation to crush, by weight of superior numbers, the weak British garrisons, left apparently in positions hopelessly exposed and without support, was irresistible. Heavy commandos were therefore massed against these points of resistance, with the results that the early invasion of Cape Colony by the Free State was deferred until too late to secure its full effect, and the advantages conferred on the enemy by the railways, both eastern and western, have been in a great measure neutralised through communication being denied to the Boers at every point where a British post was held. It is true that the mobility of the burgher commandos enabled them for a few days to push far south into Natal, destroying the line and some of its bridges, isolating garrisons, looting, and commandeering the disloyal, but those transient successes fell far short of the programme drawn up by the Boer commanders, under which all Natal was to be over-run, Pietermaritzburg taken, and terms of peace dictated thence. Had the places named been evacuated, and the invading commandos given free use of the railways farther south, Maritzburg would have been the southern point of the concentration of the Boer army in Natal instead of Ladysmith, and the weight of attack in the west would have fallen on some point far to the south of Kimberley in the heart of Cape Colony, with possible consequences not pleasant to contemplate. The task of the British is far from being accomplished, but we may be well content that fortune has not been more adverse, and that stout hearts have borne us up so far and carried us to Bloemfontein. To transport by rail a combined force of all arms, in an army organised according to the existing military systems of Europe, presents many difficulties, and demands the greatest exactness both in the pre-arrangement of details and in their execution. Otherwise confusion will ensue, as was the case with the French in their war with Prussia in 1870, and much of the benefits that railways, properly worked, can confer, will be lost. On the other hand, with a force of more primitive constitution, like that of the Boers, the difficulties referred to are non-existent to a great extent. If the railway be a boon to the mounted Boer, with his great mobility and his simple commissariat and transport arrangements, it is an absolute essential for the less mobile British Army. To furnish an army like ours with adequate wheeled transport is one of the greatest difficulties to be confronted when an expedition beyond sea is undertaken. To send from this country the immense train of vehicles required is out of the question, and the extent to which local resources can be depended on to make good the deficiency is always a matter of uncertainty. In the present war these difficulties have been materially lessened by the fact that the railways traverse the theatre of war in directions very favourable on the whole to the operations, leading as they do, either straight upon, or within striking distance of the Boer capitals.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE VOLUNTEERS.

THE proposals of the Government with regard to the Volunteer force, as explained by Lord Lansdowne in the House of Lords, must be considered under two heads. So far as the first part is concerned, the Government Bill is an amendment of that of 1863, and an amendment which is demanded by the more military spirit pervading the force to which it immediately applies. As matters stand, her Majesty can call out the Volunteer force in case of actual or apprehended invasion in any part of the United Kingdom. This has been the law governing the force since its creation in 1859. But many of the best known Volunteer officers have for years past urged the Government to make their service more of a military reality than it is, holding that by so doing it would be increased both in usefulness and popularity. The Government, having considered the matter in all its bearings, has at length yielded to pressure, and it is now proposed that the words "in case of imminent national danger or great emergency" shall be substituted for "actual or apprehended invasion." Of course this change in the wording of the Act will make a great difference in the value of the Volunteers as an organisation for national defence; but the wisdom of the alteration cannot be questioned by any one who appreciates the full extent of our military wants.

As to the second proposal of the Government, opinion evidently is divided. Lord Lansdowne explains the new feature thus:—"We propose under this Bill to take powers under which Volunteers will be able to enter into an agreement which will render them liable to service at any time, whether a proclamation of emergency has been issued or not, and in any part of the world, whether within or without the limits of the United Kingdom." In other words it is the intention to create two classes of Volunteers, one for home defence only, and another for general service. Many of the most earnest Volunteer officers regard the innovation with great favour. On the other hand, the older members of the force are strongly opposed to any interference with existing principles. It has to be borne in mind, however, that if the views of the latter class had been accepted, the City Imperial Volunteers would never have been heard of, and certainly the Volunteer companies which have been winning golden opinions in South Africa would not have been afforded an opportunity of showing to the world that the Citizen Army is something more than a body of men with muskets. On the whole, the Government is fully justified, it seems to us, in applying to Parliament to increase its powers. In fact, we fail to see how it could very well have done otherwise after what has happened lately. By refusing to amend the existing system it would virtually have been playing into the hands of the "old school," when it has been due entirely to the more progressive teaching of the younger generation of officers and non-commissioned officers that the bonds of discipline have been tightened, and every infantry battalion in the Service is now represented in the fighting line in South Africa by men who are upholding the credit of British arms. In all the circumstances of the case, therefore, the Government was left no alternative but to bring in its present Bill, of the success of which no doubts can exist.

MILITARY CRITICISM.

THE gentleman who furnishes one of our best daily papers with criticisms on the military operations in South Africa—who is, we believe, a civilian—has distinctly defined its work. "It has nothing to do in peace time—this 'War Office'—but to get ready for the next war." To do that it is only necessary to insist on "the application of common sense" to the preparations to be made for it! Unfortunately the critic does not indicate what sort of war it is to be, but contents himself with asking "if anybody is now applying common sense to prepare the things that will be necessary" in the anonymous conflict? In another daily paper Mr. A. G. Hales gives his ideas about military matters in ex cathedra fashion. His conclusions, from what he has seen in the Free State, are that Tommy "is not nearly so good a fighter as his father or grandfather was," and he justifies the assertion by asking if the latter allowed themselves to be taken prisoners wholesale like the present generation. And the officers? Well, Mr. Hales thinks "there are too many fops amongst them and not enough of fighters." "The dunce and the dandy" march side by side with gallant gentlemen, and men never "intended to handle anything but a lady's lap-dog" are "trusted with the care of soldiers and get position solely because our Army is rotten." "Subalterns lack experience"—they have not been fighting all their lives, and the Army of England must "cease to be the dumping ground of fashionable young men who want a little service." To please Mr. Hales they must be "more often under canvas and less in drawing rooms," and able to do the work of a corporal as well as that of an officer. With a strong infusion of bushmen, ranchers, backwoodsmen, cowboys, and Colonials in the commissioned ranks these dandy gentlemen will be warned off from the Service, and the British Army become "the Army of the future," which will be, however, in no respect like the Army which, under Marlborough, carried its colours through Europe to the Danube, drove the legions of Napoleon, under Marshal after Marshal, from the Ebro and Douro to Bayonne under Wellington, and finally broke down the power and overthrew the throne of the great soldier at Waterloo.

Army Notes.

Needless to say it was not an Englishman who coined the famous phrase, "God is on the side of the biggest battalions!" Our whole history proves the contrary, and Mafeking is the latest illustration of it. With no strategical advantages, a small garrison of irregulars and toy guns, this little frontier town held out for seven months against overwhelming forces provided with the latest inventions in heavy artillery, and commanded for months by the redoubtable Cronje. Unfortunately its defence had no direct bearing on the issue of the campaign. Hence it will not take rank with the greatest sieges of history. Nevertheless, the unparalleled enthusiasm with which its relief was hailed throughout the Empire was inspired by a thoroughly sound instinct. The defence of Mafeking was less a military achievement than a moral triumph. With all the odds against them the average population of a Colonial town, strengthened by a few Colonial irregulars and a dozen Imperial officers, kept the flag flying for the honour of England. How they did it is the most stirring story in our annals since the defence of Lucknow. "In spite of their hardships the women and children never complain," one telegram told us. Was ever a tragedy told in simpler words? Even Major-General Baden-Powell's cheeriest message conveyed a heart-break, his resourcefulness a suggestion of starvation, and his ceaseless activity a warning that the town was hard pressed. If ever a beleaguered garrison overcame superior material force by moral force, it was the garrison of Mafeking. Against big battalions, big guns, and supreme efforts, their most effective weapons were pluck, endurance, watchfulness, and heroic devotion to duty. That these proved successful was due to the genius and personality of General Baden-Powell. A born leader of men, he conducted the defence solely as the circumstances of the case directed, a method which never fails either in politics or war. As a consequence he found himself more than a match for the Boers at their own game, creating a system of trenches which even Cronje might have envied. Otherwise the town could not have been held. Whatever the military historian of the future may say about the defence of Ladysmith and Kimberley, he will have nothing but praise for the relief of Mafeking.

The defence of Mafeking from every point of view but one is the great event of the war. There is not the slightest doubt that it prevented a rising of the natives in the west and in Rhodesia, a calamity whose far-reaching consequences it is impossible to estimate. It also prevented Boer raiding in the Chartered Company's territories, and the destruction of the railway to Bulawayo. Moreover, it held a force of from eight to ten thousand Boers, under the Transvaal's ablest general, until the critical period of the campaign had passed. But this is not all. Mafeking was defended by Colonial irregulars. The Protectorate Regiment and the Bechuanaland Police Force are mounted corps permanently employed, but together they do not number more than six hundred. Hence the strength of the garrison, organised by General Baden-Powell, constituted the able-bodied civilians of the town. That Regular soldiers in the Army would have played a more distinguished part is difficult to believe. Even on the commander's small staff there was a Colonial—Captain Gordon Wilson—who is an Australian. Every quality associated with the Briton as a fighting man was shown by the defenders of Mafeking. Their last great feat is probably unparalleled in military annals. That a body of troops with no regular training, half-starved, and weakened by the hardships of a seven months' siege, should have been able to out-manoeuvre a large force of the enemy, which had been allowed to carry some of the outworks, divide it, corner one detachment while beating off the main body, and take over a hundred prisoners, is very creditable.

After lengthy consideration, the Service members of the House of Commons have formally adopted the scheme of Army reform which Colonel Welby submitted to the Committee early in March. The draft letter embodying Colonel Welby's proposals was, it will be remembered, referred to a small but strong sub-committee, and it is the scheme as amended by that body which was approved by the Service Members' Committee, as a whole, on Thursday. The conclusions arrived at are to be forwarded to the Prime Minister, and, coming from such a source, they cannot fail to command the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government. It has been a matter of complaint in some quarters against the military men in the House that, whilst ready to criticise the existing system of Army administration, they were unable to agree upon any programme of their own. This reproach can no longer be levelled against them, and we shall await with interest and some hope the effect of the action they have now taken. Colonel Welby's scheme, as revised by the sub-committee, differs in some particulars from that originally made, and we may say at once that with many of the proposals we are in complete agreement. Indeed, many of the reforms we have ourselves long urged on the military authorities. One of the weak spots in our administration hitherto has been the difficulty of locating responsibility for Imperial defence. The Service members suggest that the responsibility should rest unmistakably with the Cabinet, or their representatives, the Council of Defence. This sounds well in theory, but in practice it is not easy to make a civilian Secretary of State responsible for matters in giving his decision upon which he must largely rely upon the advice of others. This is a difficulty, however, that can never be overcome so long as the British Constitution remains as it is. Still, the grades of responsibility might be more clearly defined than at present, and here the proposals of the Service members may be useful. It is proposed, firstly, that the Secretary for War shall be responsible to the nation; that the Commander-in-Chief and the Financial Secretary perform their respective duties and shall see that the Army Estimates are properly prepared. In the next place the scheme provides that the Commander-in-Chief shall be responsible to the Secretary of State for the organisation and efficiency of the Army. The Financial Secretary, too, it is held, should be responsible for financially reviewing and compiling the Army Estimates and for the proper application of the sums granted, and should not be connected with any department of either supply or manufacture for the Army. It is urged, moreover, that greater decentralisation is desirable, and that the present system of training staff officers requires reconsideration and development. With regard to policy, the scheme lays down that an adequate portion of the Army should be kept organised as a force complete in itself, and maintained in constant readiness for immediate service without calling out more than the "A" section of Reserves. No given number is laid down for the strength of the rest of the field Army at home, but it is maintained that it should equal in efficiency a force of the same numbers any other nation could place in the field. The forces maintained for home defence and emergency should, in addition to the troops required for garrisoning, provide an organised force proportioned in all arms, and provided with cadres of transport, ammunition trains and services, ready to be filled up in time of need to complete the force and render it mobile in the field. In conclusion, it is suggested that the Army, being based on voluntary enlistment, the terms of service should be adapted to the wants of those willing to enlist, and should, consequently, be elastic to attract the greatest numbers. When the total force necessary for service abroad and for home requirements is decided upon, it might be possible, it is thought, by a combination of short and long terms of service to find the men necessary for the Regular Army.

The Bill dealing with the constitution of the Volunteer force comes up for second reading in the House of Lords on Monday. The Bill makes two alterations in the law affecting the Volunteer forces. It gives a new definition of the conditions under which they can be called out for actual military service, and it takes power to the War Office to agree with the Volunteer to come forward for service in any part of the world, whether within or without her Majesty's dominions. Under the present Act, too, the Volunteers may be called out only "in case of actual or apprehended invasion of any part of the United Kingdom." Lord Lansdowne points out that this is a clumsy and inconvenient formula, since we might desire the services of Volunteers at a moment of international complications when it was not desirable to tell the world that we apprehended invasion. It is proposed, therefore, to substitute the words "in case of imminent national danger or great emergency." Under this alteration the Volunteer's liability to serve will be limited by these two conditions, and so far as the whole force is concerned the Government have no idea of dispensing with these restrictions. But they believe that there are many Volunteers who would be glad to come forward for service when there has been no proclamation of emergency, and would be willing to serve outside the United Kingdom. They desire, therefore, to ascertain who these are, and also to see their fitness for special duties. The men who intimate their readiness to give such service will be known as the Special Service Corps. It cannot, however, be too distinctly understood that the joining of such corps will be a purely voluntary act on the part of the men. It may be, of course, that no great number will come forward, but the experience of the South Africa War seems to point otherwise. The Volunteer forces contributed no less than sixty-three service companies, with the necessary drafts, companies which are at present serving in South Africa with the Line battalions to which they are annexed. It is pointed out that there may be danger that in time of peace the provisions of the Bill may discourage the enlistment of Volunteers. This is an objection which we hope to see threshed out on the second reading of the Bill, and later when the Bill goes down to the House of Commons and is considered by the Service members. As the proposed agreement is entirely optional, however, it would scarcely seem, on the face of it, to carry any such risk.

The latest message to the Colonial office from Kumasi was dated the 12th inst. So far as can be gathered from official sources the situation is unchanged. It is hoped, however, that the advance guard of the relief force will be within striking distance in a day or two. Colonel Willcocks is expected hourly at Cape Coast Castle. Lieut.-Colonel Carter, C.M.G., Royal Scots, has arrived from the Niger Coast Protectorate, with a force of 300 men. He was taken ill on landing, but by latest accounts had recovered and was going forward. Captain Shortland, however, who landed with his party, was being invalided. At the Colonial Office it was not thought yesterday that there was cause for anxiety as the force being sent up will be quite sufficient, it is said, to meet all emergencies. It has to be remembered that Lord Wolseley and Sir Evelyn Wood know the country well, and if there were cause for alarm they would long since have pressed on the Government the necessity for somewhat more vigorous action.

The foreign papers discuss events in South Africa with more calmness than has lately distinguished them, and the serious organs at length recognise that success lies before us. It is, however, curious to see in what a grudging spirit some of the German papers regard recent events. The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung has a difficult task in attempting to make everything appear to our disadvantage, and it calls to its help the Journal de St. Pétersbourg, which appears to entertain great hopes of the success of the Boers, and points out that Lord Roberts's troops are "no better than Sir Redvers Buller's," and that some of his difficulties are even greater. The immediate subject of our Berlin contemporary is the Boer raid into the south-eastern corner of the Orange State, of which it remarks that our enemies succeeded in completely upsetting our plans by employing their customary tactics, and in causing us to use up our horses and transport animals, thus greatly prolonging the campaign. They are also credited with having destroyed the moral effect upon the people of the Orange State which had been brought about by Lord Roberts's earlier operations. The spirit in which the Heeres-Zeitung approaches its subject may be seen in its statement that Lord Roberts's next work would be to pacify the district ravaged, and that fire and sword would probably be the methods. It also pictures Lord Methuen as in a very doubtful situation at Boshof, and remarks that we had almost lost hope of relieving Mafeking.

The Militär-Wochenblatt discusses the same subject, but in a rather different spirit. It recognises that the incursion made by the Boers into the Wepener district, though it was attended by a certain success, was without any real influence upon the campaign. It describes the operations by which Lord Roberts hoped to cut off the retreating Boers, and expresses the opinion that they were not carried out with sufficient energy and rapidity. The Boer raid ended ignominiously, according to the semi-official organ. They had begun by a bold initiative in their operations at Reddersburg and Smithfield, but their attempts against Lord Roberts's communications were abortive, and they were content with a tactical defensive, and in the end were broken up and demoralised. In relation to this matter the Wochenblatt remarks that discipline is greatly wanting in their ranks.

The France Militaire is making a great effort to deduce lessons from the campaign, and it has now an article embodying general considerations upon the campaign in Natal. It remarks that the tactics of the Boers rest entirely in the superiority of fire suddenly unmasked, and that they use their mobility excellently to this end. This mobility has also been used in the combat to give an unusual extension to the fighting front, compelling us to spread our forces and scatter our fire. Such a method is not unlikely to lead a combatant into error in regard to the value of tactical points temporarily reinforced, and to lead him to false manoeuvres. High praise is given to the Boers as marksmen who thoroughly understand fire discipline, but on the other hand they are described as content generally with the defence, not attempting to complete their success by a counter-attack. The France Militaire blames us for attempting to attack the Boer positions with the methods of Aldershot and Salisbury Plain. We are particularly censured for incomplete reconnaissance, for inadequate preparation by artillery fire, resulting from the disproportion between the number of guns and the length of the front, for our failure to procure a superior infantry fire—we do not possess the "tactical dogma, and do not know how to manoeuvre"—for failure to preserve the proper tactical link between the artillery and infantry, and for neglecting to secure by field works the positions we have captured.

In 1898 an important change was made by the adoption of a shorter term of enlistment for the Infantry of the Line, viz., three years with the colours, and nine in the Reserve. The experiment in consequence of draft necessities was during that year restricted to fifty men for each battalion at home, while regiments with both battalions abroad were debarred from taking recruits of this class. Last year the restrictions were removed, and although it was originally intended that only one hundred recruits enlisted for three years were to be taken in each battalion, yet practically this condition was not enforced. It is, admitted, however, that the result has proved disappointing, as the number enlisted for the infantry under these provisions in 1899 was less by 585 than that for the nine months of 1898 when, as the report puts it, "the system was a novelty, and had not become generally known." The idea of the change was that it would attract a better class of men to the ranks, and that many of those enlisting under these terms would afterwards extend their service, those doing so being the class of men who remain with the colours from pure love of soldiering. Regimental officers entertained doubts from the first as to the success of the innovation, and again the regimental officers' seems to have been sound.

All sorts of suggestions are being made as to the uniform of Highland regiments. Even the officers of these regiments themselves are apparently doubtful whether the kilt is quite suitable for service in a country like South Africa. There would be nothing gained, however, by any hasty decision in the matter, and we quite agree with a "Highland Field Officer now at the Front," who wrote to us by the last mail, asking us in the name of the Highland Brigade serving under Major-General MacDonald to use our influence to prevent any discussion taking place until the war is over. We fully endorse his view that the present is scarcely the moment for deciding whether the kilt is or is not serviceable for the purposes of war. Various proposals have been made for bettering it, but none of them, so far as we are able to judge, are altogether practical, and even if they were it is questionable whether they would prove acceptable to the regiments concerned, for no one who has ever been associated with Highland battalions will fail to recognise the part that esprit de corps plays among them. In all the circumstances the wisest course would be, perhaps, to let the matter stand over for consideration. It will be time enough for commanding officers of the Highland battalions to report what their experiences have been when the fighting is all over. If, as is stated, the kilt has failed to fulfil all the conditions of an active service field dress, a representative committee of Highland officers would be able without much difficulty to recommend improvement; but, to talk glibly of doing away with the Highland uniform altogether, or introducing a universal tartan, is to display ignorance not only of Highland military traditions, but of the character of the races from which most of the officers and men of our Highland regiments are drawn. The aim of the War Office at the present time is to encourage recruiting in Scotland. Any interference with the uniform of the kilted corps would have such an injurious effect on recruiting north of the Tweed that it cannot be placed in the category of practical Army reform. It is as well that this should be recognised, as some writers of letters to the press would appear to entirely close their eyes to an all-important fact, which would be bound to influence the action of the War Office.

The Royal Reserve battalions, having now received their arms and accoutrements, have settled down to steady work, and from all quarters we are glad to hear the best accounts of them, the non-commissioned officers and men earning the confidence and respect of all associated with them. As one commanding officer put it, "It is quite a pleasure to have to issue orders to such a battalion as that of which I am in charge, for one knows that one's orders will be obeyed cheerfully. Every effort should be made to keep as many of these men as possible with the colours, for they would be invaluable as a leaven to the mass. We have heard so much against the old soldier that it is quite a revelation to find him such a thoroughly trustworthy good fellow as he turns out to be."

We are improving our system by degrees. It is certainly satisfactory to know that as far back as the beginning of January the General Officer Commanding at Cape Town received instructions that invalids proceeding home should on embarkation be supplied with clothing suitable for wear in this country, as well as on the voyage.

Officers recalled from the half-pay list to serve with Reserve regiments are not entitled to receive outfit allowances, but the Secretary of State for War has taken a lenient view of their case, and is anxious to place them on the same footing as other officers, if the Treasury raises no objection. It certainly would be most unfair to place these officers at a disadvantage, seeing that their employment is of a temporary nature only, and presumably for the good of the public service.

Mr. Wyndham, interrogated by Major Rasch, on Tuesday informed the House "that at the forthcoming examination of Militia candidates for Army commissions all will compete under the same conditions, as all Militia units are now embodied." But, unfortunately, it has not yet been made known what these conditions are to be. This seems rather unfair to those who are anxious to qualify themselves. It does not give them much time for preparation.

We understand that the Egyptian Government has it in contemplation to carry out shortly some changes in the local Army, and that advantage will be taken of the opportunity for effecting a slight reduction of the establishment. The matter has been fully discussed, and it is felt that the occasion for maintaining the Army at its present strength in a period of profound peace has passed, and that it would be in every way an advantage to lessen the burden of military service, and at the same time reduce expenditure. The proposed reduction will be effected gradually, and not take any formidable dimensions.

THE FIRST DUTY OF STATESMEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I think it well to begin this letter by a quotation from Capt. Mahan. In his study of a "Twentieth Century Outlook," published in Harper's New Monthly Magazine, September, 1897, he says:—"It has been an easy but a shortsighted policy to fasten attention purely on internal or economical questions, and to resent, if not to reject, propositions looking towards the organisation and maintenance of military force. It is a policy in which we are behind our ancestors. It is a policy in which we are behind our contemporaries. It is a policy in which we are behind the deadening influence of merely economical ideas, because they had reached manhood before these attained the preponderance which they achieved under politicians of the Manchester school. As a matter of fact both Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury, while belonging to parties traditionally opposed, are imbued above all with the ideas of the middle of the century, and, governed by them, consider the disturbance of quiet the greatest of evils. When men in sympathy with the ideas now arising among Englishmen come into power we shall see a change—not before."

This astute American anticipated apparently Lord Salisbury's astounding assertions, before the Primrose League, and answered them in advance in his essay on "Preparedness for Naval War," Harper's New Monthly, March, 1897:—

"To provide a force adequate to maintain the nation's cause and to ensure its readiness for immediate action in case of necessity are the responsibility of the Government of a state in its legislative and executive functions."

Again he formulated a system very unlike the shreds and patches of absurdity which compose the shifting devices set forth in the recent official and platform utterances of our Cabinet ministers.

"Preparation is a question of kind and degree, of quality and of quantity. The measure of degree is the estimated force which the possible strongest enemy can bring against you, allowance being made for clear drawbacks upon his total force, imposed by his own embarrassments and responsibilities in other parts of the world. In kind preparation is twofold,—defensive and offensive. The former exists chiefly for the latter, in order that offence, the determining factor in war, may put forth its full power, unhampered by concern for the protection of the national interests or for its own resources."

Assuredly, sir, these are considerations of supreme gravity, far transcending in importance all the other duties of statesmen. If these considerations are neglected the vitality of a State is in danger. And yet our Cabinet Ministers care for none of these things: have grossly ignored the need of preparation for war, and in all their speeches and explanations have been trifling with the people at large and inflicting bitter humiliation on their supporters. To our Cabinets may be applied Lord Bacon's rebuke:—"It is in the power of statesmen by introducing wise ordinances, institutions and customs to secure a race of military men, and by being ready for any just occasion of arming to 'sow greatness to their posterity and succession,' but these things are not commonly observed, but are left to chance."

Lord Bacon held that this "was an argument fit for great and mighty princes and rulers to have in hand."

Lord Salisbury says, on the other hand, that "the defence of the country is not the business of the War Office or of the Government."

So far the experience of history appears to justify the Elizabethan rather than the Victorian sage.

At much pecuniary loss and some loss of reputation in our profession, many of us have persistently refrained, whether in the Press or on the platform, from uttering one word of adverse comment on our generals or staff in the field. Personally I believed, and still believe, about our soldiers in South Africa of all ranks what Shakespeare says: "They dared do all that may become a man; who dares do more, is none."

But the crass incompetence and glaring impertinence of stay-at-home sophists, who are at least as well paid for their share in our national business as are generals or non-commissioned officers, can no longer be concealed.

T. MILLER MAGUIRE.

12, Earl's Court Square, May 16.

P.S.—An important matter which apparently has not been noticed, is the state in which a corps proceeds on service. A young officer writes in a letter to me:—

"First they withdraw all trained mounted infantry, signallers, &c. Then they take a whole company away to make into mounted infantry. Then they add a company of volunteers, and between 200 and 300 Militia Reservists, the latter of which class has, perhaps, never fired a rifle off. My company is 50 per cent. Reserve and 25 per cent. Militia Reserve. To me it is exactly like commencing to read for an exam. while it is in progress. The battalion is a squeezed orange. I do not mean any one in particular. I got 16 Militia Reservists on Tuesday, and six more yesterday, others—who absented themselves whenever opportunity offered along the line—will drop in daily. They all arrive minus kit and equipment, and have to be washed and ticketed, &c. I have now 40 of them, and have not enough Reserve men and Regulars to form a front rank now. I sent five more to the Mounted Infantry to-day. One man confounded me this morning by saying that 'he didn't know figures' (on the backsight). Though stout and willing fellows they are not fit to pit against the cunning Boers—especially on sentry."

Lord Wolseley was forty years of age when he was promoted to Major-General for distinguished service in the field on April 1, 1874. Lord Roberts was promoted by seniority at forty-six years of age on December 31, 1878. Sir Redvers Buller, promoted for service in the field May 21, 1884, was forty-four. Sir George White, promoted for field service, was fifty-two; Lord Kitchener was forty-six, Sir Archibald Hunter forty, Sir Leslie Rundle forty, Sir Herbert Chermiside forty-eight, and General French forty-seven. Major-General Baden-Powell, the gallant defender of Mafeking, promoted this week, is forty-three.

Of the officers promoted on Tuesday to the Grand Cross of the Bath, General Sir C. O. Johnson became a C.B., June 2, 1877, and a K.C.B., May 24, 1881; Sir Baker Russell a C.B., March 31, 1874, and a K.C.B., November 18, 1882; Sir William Olpherts, V.C., a C.B., July 26, 1858, and a K.C.B., May 29, 1886. The new K.C.B.'s were given their C.B.'s: Generals Sir T. E. Gordon, K.C.I.E., February 22, 1881; and G. D. Barker, May 25, 1889. Lieut.-Generals J. L. Nation, February 22, 1881; E. Hopton, May 29, 1886; and H. Le G. Geary, May 30, 1891. Major-Generals J. Hills, February 22, 1881; H. McCallmont, August 25, 1885; T. Fraser, C.M.G., May 30, 1891; and J. F. Maurice, May 30, 1891.

General Sir John Davis, who is appointed to the Colonelcy of the Royal Sussex Regiment, served in the old 35th, from February 13, 1852, to November 26, 1860, when he exchanged as a Captain to the 37th Regiment.

The selection of General Montgomery-Moore for a K.C.B. has occasioned surprise in some quarters, as he has no war service. It has to be remembered, however, that General Montgomery-Moore is now in acting command of the troops at Aldershot. He was for five years, too, in command in British North America. In all the circumstances of the case it was thought that the general's services were such as to call for recognition. It is scarcely necessary for us to point out that General Montgomery-Moore was eligible for appointment as a K.C.B., but not a C.B., according to the rules of the Order.

Lieut.-General G. S. Young, C.B., is transferred from the Colonelcy of the Royal Sussex Regiment to that of the South Staffordshire Regiment, vacant by the death of General J. W. S. Smith, C.B. General Young received his first commission in the old 80th in 1841, and remained with it until 1862, when he went on half-pay as Major.

Lieut.-General Sir George White has consented to accept a charger from the people of Belfast, and has fixed June 16 as the date for receiving the presentation.

Major-General Sir William Gatacre will resume command of the Eastern District about the 4th prox. General Gatacre's name appeared among the recipients of Birthday honours on Wednesday, he having been decorated with the Gold Medal of the Kaiser-i-Hind Order in recognition of his devoted service in India during the plague. In the Morning Post of Monday Mr. Winston Churchill pays a high tribute to General Gatacre. To give a brief extract:—

"Because General Gatacre has been cruelly persecuted in England by people quite ignorant of the difficulties of war or of the conditions under which it is carried on in this country, it is perhaps not out of place to write a few words of different tenor. Gatacre was a man who made his way in the Army, not through any influence or favour which he enjoyed, but by sheer hard work and good service. Wherever he had served he had left a high record behind him. On the Indian frontier he gained the confidence of so fine a soldier as Sir Bindon Blood, and it was largely to his reputation won in the Chitral Expedition that his subsequent advancement was due. At Bombay in 1897 he was entrusted with the duty of fighting the plague, then just gripping its deadly fingers into the city. No one who is at all acquainted with the course of this pest will need to be told how excellent was his work."

Major-General Ian Hamilton, C.B., obtains the local rank of Lieutenant-General in South Africa to command the Mounted Infantry Division.

As will be seen from the following list the youngest of the officers created C.B.'s this week is Lieut.-Colonel Childers, whilst the oldest is Colonel Roberts. The names are given according to Army seniority:—

Surgeon-General H. S. Muir,
A.M.S. ... born Oct. 4, 1841.
Major-General E. S. Brook ... Oct. 7, 1845.
Colonel V. Rivar, I.S.C. ... June 26, 1842.
Colonel A. McBruce, B.I. ... Jan. 5, 1842.
Colonel C. C. Brownlow, I.S.C. ... Nov. 20, 1843.
Colonel E. Molloy, I.S.C. ... June 15, 1842.
Colonel R. A. Swetenham, I.S.C. May 25, 1845,
I.S.C. ... May 6, 1851.
Colonel W. J. Vousden, V.C.,
I.S.C. ... Sept. 20, 1845.
Brigadier-General H. Pipon, R.A. Dec. 4, 1843.
Major-General F. W. Hemming ... Aug. 2, 1850.
Colonel H. G. Grant ... July 23, 1845.
Colonel R. C. Hare ... Aug. 8, 1844.
Colonel C. H. Bagot, R.E. ... May 18, 1847.
Colonel A. R. F. Dorward, R.E. ... July 13, 1848.
Colonel E. Roberts, A.P.D. ... Jan. 8, 1841.
Colonel C. V. Hamilton, A.S.C. ... Oct. 22, 1851.
Colonel H. Thomson, A.V.D. ... Nov. 17, 1851.
Lieut.-Colonel B. B. Conolly,
A.M.S. ... Sept. 10, 1845.
Brevet Lieut.-Colonel E. S. E.
Childers, R.E. ... Jan. 11, 1854.

Colonel Baden-Powell is promoted over the heads of some 190 officers who are senior to him on the list of Colonels. He was born February 22, 1857; joined the Army as Sub-Lieutenant 13th Hussars, September 11, 1876; and became Colonel, May 8, 1897. His first active service was in Ashanti with Sir F. Scott's expedition 1895-96. He was specially employed during the Rhodesian troubles 1896-97 (brevet of Colonel), and left England in July last on special service.

Three Colonels on the active list would, in ordinary circumstances, be retired next month for age disqualification, viz., Colonels F. Glennie, Commandant at Kneller Hall; F. Cochran, Deputy Judge Advocate, Headquarters; and R. C. Græme, late of the King's Own Light Infantry, on June 27. Colonels Glennie and Cochran are, however, to be retained in their present employment until matters settle down in South Africa.

Colonel B. T. Mahon, D.S.O., 8th Hussars, who commanded the Mafeking relief column, was born April 3, 1862, and joined the Army from the Militia January 27, 1883; became Captain, 8th Hussars, April 19, 1888; he was Adjutant May 31, 1890, to January 19, 1893. He vacated his appointment in order to join the Egyptian Army; was promoted Major October 19, 1897; Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel November 16, 1898; and Brevet-Colonel on March 14 last—the latter step being accorded in recognition of his services in connection with the defeat of the Khalifa. He had previously served with much distinction in the Dongola Expedition, Nile Expedition, 1897, and expedition to Khartoum, 1898.

Colonel W. F. Cavaye, who has been in command of the 35th Regimental District since November 3, 1898, left England on Wednesday for South Africa on special service. Colonel H. Kilgour, late of the Northumberland Fusiliers, whose five years as Recruiting Staff Officer at Woolwich have just expired, has succeeded Colonel Cavaye at Chichester.

Colonel R. H. Oxley, retired list, late 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, has been appointed to the 4th Batn. Royal Northern Reserve Regiment.

Colonel the Hon. G. H. Gough, C.B., Naval and Military Club, Piccadilly, who died at Bloemfontein, on March 28, appointed as the executors of his will of October 30, 1891, with a codicil of July 28, 1898, his brother Viscount Gough, of 24, Bruton Street, and his widow the Hon. Mrs. Hilda Eva Gough, of 58, Sloane Street. He left all his property on trust for his wife for life, and then in equal shares to his children. The value of the estate amounts to £21,142 15s. 1d.

Colonel S. H. P. Graves, I.S.C., A.A.G. Lahore, comes home on a year's leave.

Two Colonels of the Indian Staff Corps will be retired next month for age, viz., Colonels H. V. Hunt, on June 27, and H. S. Tandy, on June 30.

Colonel A. Clark-Kennedy having been promoted, Colonel J. Cook, C.B., now stands first for promotion on the Indian Staff Corps list, with Brigadier-General A. G. Hammond, V.C., C.B., second.

Colonels B. C. Graves, C.B., and C. A. R. Sage, I.S.C., and J. H. Newman, I.M.S., are permitted to reside out of India.

The estate of Lieut.-Colonel J. Sherston, D.S.O., A.A.G. to the late Lieut.-General Sir Penn Symons, who was killed in action at Glen-coe, Natal, on October 20, has been entered for probate at the sum of £1,577.

Lieut.-Colonel H. G. Mainwaring, 2nd Batn. South Wales Borderers, who completes his four years in command on June 9, has been granted an extension for twelve months. Three other regimental commands fall in next month, viz., the 11th Hussars (Lieut.-Colonel E. R. Courtenay) and 2nd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry (Colonel F. H. Plowden) on June 27, and the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers (Colonel J. Reeves), extended term, on June 30.

Lieut.-Colonel H. Goad, I.S.C., Director of the Indian Army Remount Department, comes home on three months' privilege leave, and it is proposed to place him on duty for one month with a view to his visiting, if possible, the studs and remount establishments in France, Germany, and Hungary.

Lieut.-Colonel C. F. Stevens, 15th Madras Infantry, has been granted an extension of command for eighteen months.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. M. G. Talbot, R.E., Director of Military Intelligence in Egypt, is now designated Director of Surveys, and will be responsible more particularly for the conduct of the new survey operations.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel C. Fergusson, D.S.O., Grenadier Guards, is now Military Governor of Khartoum.

It will interest those who knew the Royal Irish Hussars in the fifties and early sixties to learn that Commander Heneage, R.N., just promoted to that rank in recognition of his distinguished services with the Powerful's contingent at Ladysmith, is a son of Major C. W. Heneage, who was decorated with the Victoria Cross, and promoted to a Brevet-Major for his brilliant services during the Indian Mutiny. Major Heneage, who also served with the 8th Hussars throughout the Crimean Campaign, retired more than thirty years ago by sale of his commission.

Major H. J. Craufurd, retired list, late Grenadier Guards, has taken up duty as acting D.A.A.G., Portsmouth.

Major W. G. Hamilton, D.S.O., 2nd Batn. East Lancashire Regiment, has joined the staff at Bengal Army Headquarters as D.A.Q.M.G.

Major W. H. Hunter, Seaforth Highlanders, has been appointed by the Sirdar to the command of the Assouan Military District; Brevet-Major, G. B. Macauley, R.E., of the Halfa District; and Captain R. M. Saunders, Worcestershire Regiment, of the Fashoda District.

Majors M. L. Shipley, 13th Bengal Lancers. H. L. Custance, 36th Sikhs; A. R. Browning, 4th Punjab Infantry; and Brevet-Major H. F. Holland, 22nd Punjab Infantry, have qualified, tactically, for permanent command of a regiment.

Brevet-Major H. G. K. Matchett, Connaught Rangers, is now in command of the Military School of the Egyptian Army.

Captain V. Sloane-Stanley, 12th Lancers, who a couple of months ago rejoined his regiment in South Africa from active service in Nigeria, has been selected to serve on the staff of Major-General Broadwood, and appointed Brigade Signaller.

Captain K. K. Knapp, R.A., has been appointed Brigade-Major to Major-General Tyler, Inspector-General of Artillery in India.

* Captain W. A. Liddell, R.E., has been appointed to succeed Major J. E. Dallas, R.E., who reverts to the home establishment as Assistant Secretary of the Indian Military Secretariat.

Captain W. Perry, 3rd Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, has been appointed A.D.C. to Colonel J. W. Webber, commanding the Irish Militia Brigade at Aldershot.

Captains G. S. F. Napier, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, and C. H. Clay, I.S.C., Staff Captains, have been appointed D.A.Q.M.G.'s, Military Intelligence, at Simla, vice Captains A. A. J. Johnstone and J. A. Douglas, I.S.C. Captains F. A. Houghton, 1st Bombay Infantry, and W. L. Conran, 25th Bombay Infantry, have succeeded to the vacancies.

Captain E. M. K. Parsons, 2nd Batn. Duke of Wellington's Regiment, has been selected for the Adjutantcy of the new 4th V.B. Royal West Kent Regiment.

Captain W. H. Hardyman, West India Regiment, has been appointed Adjutant of the 3rd Batn. Border Regiment.

* Lieutenant W. M. C. Vandeleur, 1st Batn. Essex Regiment, greatly distinguished himself at Koorn Spruit. Several correspondents have mentioned his act of heroism. Mr. H. H. S. Pearce, the well-known war correspondent, who all will be pleased to learn has not suffered seriously from the effect of the Ladysmith siege, and is now on duty at Bloemfontein, tells how the gallant young officer, assisted by two of his mounted infantry men, brought a wounded gunner to a place of safety, and then went out with another officer to help at the guns regardless of all danger. Acts like these are not only creditable to the individuals themselves, but to the regiment to which they belong, but unfortunately unless reported by a senior officer who has been an eye-witness, do not secure official recognition.

The Rev. J. W. Adams, V.C., Vicar of Stow Bardolph and Rector of Wimbotsham, Norfolk, has been appointed by the Prince of Wales to be an Honorary Chaplain to his Royal Highness.

Mr. E. H. Packe has been appointed Assistant Private Secretary (unpaid) to Lord Lansdowne, vice Mr. H. Morrison, who has resigned the appointment.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, May 19.

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed from Newcastle at 7.30 p.m., stating that Sir F. Clery had moved to the Ingogo to-day, and Lord Dundonald to Laing's Nek. Gen. Buller's force "almost caught up the tail of the enemy's column, made a few prisoners, and captured a few waggons. The men have marched very well indeed."

Sir Redvers left Ladysmith May 10, and by to-day was 132 miles distant. Praise is given in a despatch to the Royal Engineers and Army Service Corps: "The Telegraph Section, under Major Hawkins and Capt. Kennedy, have been indefatigable, and the Army Service Corps, under Col. Stanley and Major Hunt, have kept us on full rations all the time," says Sir Redvers. The 5th Division, under Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard, is said to have done "a great deal of hard work."

Sunday, May 20.

A squadron of Bethune's Mounted Infantry fell into an ambush to-day to the south-west of Vryheid. Col. Bethune had, on the 18th, been detached by Sir Redvers Buller, with 500 men, to march from Dundee by Vantis Drift, show his force in Nqutu, and rejoin the main body at Newcastle. In the course of the return march, the squadron was surrounded. It lost 27 killed, 25 wounded, and 11 prisoners. Capt. Lord De la Warr was slightly wounded, Capt. Goff, 3rd Dragoon Guards, being among the killed. Col. Bethune returned to Nqutu for supplies. The information reached the War Office on Tuesday, being conveyed in a telegram from Sir Redvers Buller. Detailed accounts show that when the enemy opened fire Capt. Goff dismounted the men, and an attempt was made to clear a kopje, but the Boers, working round to their right flank, poured volleys from a Maxim and rifles at the horses at such close range that nearly all were killed or wounded. The men, though mown down by the deadly fire, fought to the last, neither asking nor giving quarter. Capt. Ford, commanding another squadron, attempted to go to their assistance; but the fire was so murderous that he found it impossible. Col. Bethune, seeing that darkness was setting in, and that it was impossible to force the position, ordered a retirement under cover of the Hotchkiss guns, which was carried out in the most orderly manner.

Monday, May 21.

Official confirmation received of the relief of Mafeking, Col. Mahon having entered the town at the head of his column on the 18th, after having joined hands with Col. Plumer. His command consisted of 2,300 men, described as thoroughly Imperial, and made up partly of British infantry and horse artillery and partly of Colonial mounted troops, the infantry consisting of volunteers from the Fusilier Brigade—English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh. Col. Mahon evaded the Boers about Fourteen Streams, and met with no serious opposition until he reached Koodoosrand, a little south of Maritsani, on the 13th. Here the Boer commando, which had been moving parallel to him on the right for a couple of days, anticipated him and occupied the position. Col. Mahon again slipped past them, but not without sustaining a determined attack on his main column. Having beaten the Boers, Mahon marched on to a place called Jan Masibi, 20 miles west of Mafeking, where he was joined on the 14th by Col. Plumer, who had made a forced march from Lobatsi. With Col. Plumer were not only the Rhodesians, but a force of Canadians sent from Beira by Sir F. Carrington. Cols. Mahon and Plumer having united their forces, marched straight for Mafeking. The Boers were met on the 17th, and offered a stubborn resistance to the advancing column, but being defeated fled south-east towards Lichtenburg. Col. Mahon pays a high tribute to the gallantry and splendid qualities of his troops, the Canadian contingent being specially mentioned. The admirable conduct of these men has been brought to the notice of the Governor-General of Canada by Sir Alfred Milner.

From Col. Baden-Powell news was received that a determined attack was made on the 13th inst. to take Mafeking. Before dawn a storming party, 250 strong, personally led by Eloff, rushed the picquet and got into Staat and Protectorate camp from westward along Molopo Valley, a strong musketry demonstration being made at the same time all along the eastern front of our position. The western posts closed in, and stopped Boer support following up, thus cutting off Eloff's retreat, while town defence stopped his further advance. His force got divided in the darkness, and a strong party was pushed in between it, completely surrounding it. Fighting went on all day. Soon after nightfall two parties surrendered, and the other was driven out of the Staat River under heavy fire. Ten dead and 19 wounded of the enemy were left behind, and 108 prisoners taken, including Eloff and nine officers. Eloff, who was deserted by his followers, mostly foreigners, ended by firing on his own men, and then surrendered with those under his command, to Lieut.-Col. Hore, who had previously been taken prisoner. Seventeen Frenchmen and many Germans are among the prisoners. Our losses were six men killed. Wounded:—Capt. Singleton (slightly), Lieut. Bridges (slightly), and about nine men.

Major-Gen. Baden-Powell, in a despatch to Lord Roberts thus describes the relief:—

"I beg to inform you Mafeking successfully relieved to-day. Northern and southern columns joined hands on 15th, attacked enemy yesterday, 16th, and, after smart engagement, entirely defeated them with loss. British casualties, three killed, twenty-two wounded. Relieving force marched into Mafeking this morning at nine. Relief and defence force combined moved out and attacked enemy's head laager, shelled them out, and nearly captured Snyman. Took one gun, flag, and large amount ammunition, stores, &c. Five dead, fifteen wounded Boers found. Enemy appeared to be retreating in all directions, except one commando lying low, possibly to cover retreat of remainder. Captain Maclaren and Corporal Murray, B.S.A. Police, found in Boer hospital, both doing well. People and garrison Mafeking heartily grateful for their relief."

Sir Redvers Buller reported through Lord Roberts that his further advance would be delayed for a few days on account of the way in which the railway had been destroyed.

Sir Leslie Rundle reported occupation of Ladybrand.

Tuesday, May 22.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Honing Spruit, at 3.45 p.m.:—

"Ian Hamilton reached Heilbron this morning after series of engagements with Boer force under Commandant Christopher De Wet, who is retiring before him. Broadwood has captured fifteen Boer waggons. There have been seventy-five casualties in Hamilton's force up to last evening. We marched here this morning."

Sir Redvers Buller, in an order congratulating his force upon the result of their past fortnight's work, says:

"The 3rd Mounted Brigade and the 2nd and 5th Divisions have driven over Laing's Nek from carefully prepared positions on the Biggarsbergen, including that which the enemy had christened the Gibraltar of South Africa, a force of over 7,000 men, and are only checked at Laing's Nek itself by a fresh commando sent from the Transvaal forces in the Orange Free State. This result, which reflects great credit on all the troops, has been obtained by continuous hard work, long marches, and steep mountain climbing, far more trying and wearisome than the most severe fights."

The Boers to-day abandoned their strong position on the Rhenoster River, fearing that they might be outflanked by Gens. French and Hamilton.

Wednesday, May 23.

Lieut.-Gen. French with his cavalry arrived at Prospect to-day. This place is five miles to the north of Rhenoster River. Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton was co-operating with him.

Sir Archibald Hunter reached Vryburg to-night, base of operations for the western advance having thus been moved forward for 80 miles. The march of Gen. Hunter's column is spoken of as a grand achievement for a mixed force, the road being most difficult. Short rations and forced marches were endured without a word of complaint. All ranks recognise the importance of rapidity of movement.

Thursday, May 24.

Lord Roberts's head quarters, after an unopposed march, reached Vredepoort road about mid-day. This left him only two marches from the Vaal river. A most interesting telegram was despatched to-night by Reuter's correspondent with Lord Roberts's Army, in which he shows how entirely the Commander-in-Chief has out-manoeuvred the Boers from a position of great natural strength. The enemy had originally determined to make a stand, as was proved by the elaborate defence works they had constructed on the Rhenoster River and the hills commanding it. One of the most striking features of our advance, the correspondent says, "has been the wonderful energy displayed by Lord Roberts. Every morning he is up before daybreak, and rides hard till the afternoon. Wherever he halts, he at once has himself placed in connection with the telegraph, and receives and answers telegrams. In spite of all this hard work, however, Lord Roberts is, happily, in splendid health. The troops simply idolise him, he is so full of thought for them, though expecting that every man will do his duty." The position of the several commanders to-night, as far as was known, was this: Lord Roberts, Vredepoort road; Gen. Buller, Newcastle; Gen.

Clery, Ingogo; Gen. Hunter, Vryburg; Gen. French, Prospect; Gen. Ian Hamilton, Heilbron; Gen. Rundle, Trammel; Gen. Colville, Winberg; Gen. Barton, Taunga; Gen. Hart, Fourteen Streams; Gen. Warren, Douglas; Gen. Baden-Powell, Mafeking; Gen. Carrington, Marandellas; Gen. Kelly-Kenny, Bloemfontein. With Lord Roberts were Gens. Pole-Carew and Tucker. With Sir R. Buller Gens. Hildyard and Dundonald.

Friday, May 25.

From the weekly return issued by the War Office it appears that the casualties reported up to May 19 were:—

	Officers.	Men.	Total.
Killed ...	224	2,131	2,355
Died of wounds ...	53	517	575
Wounded (living) ...	697	9,522	10,219
Missing and prisoners..	171	4,304	4,475
Died in captivity ...	1	49	50
Died of disease...	84	2,719	2,803
Accidental deaths ...	—	54	54
	1,235	19,296	20,531

In all 525 officers and 9,893 men have been sent home as invalids. Exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British hospitals in South Africa, the total losses are 20,680. A large number of the wounded have, of course, returned to duty.

THE TROOPING OF THE COLOUR.

The usual ceremony of the Trooping of the Colour took place on Wednesday on the Horse Guards' Parade, on the occasion of the official celebration of her Majesty's Birthday. Col. Ricardo, Grenadier Guards, as Field Officer in Brigade Waiting, was this year in command of the parade.

The windows of the Levée Room at the Horse Guards as usual were reserved for the Princess of Wales and party. The first to arrive was the King of Sweden, who appeared at the middle window with Major Erskine, Brigade-Major. The parade was fully formed by ten o'clock, and it was just a quarter past the hour when the Duchess of Connaught drove up accompanied by her two daughters. The Duke and Duchess of Fife and their children came almost immediately afterwards, and simultaneously the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of York, and Princes Edward and Albert and Princess Victoria Alexandra of York arrived. The Prince of Wales, with whom were the Duke of York and Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, rode on to the ground immediately afterwards, with the Headquarters Staff of the Army, a group of foreign Military Attachés, and Major-Gen. Trotter, and the Staff of the Home District. As the cavalcade came in sight, one familiar figure was missing—a figure that had not been absent on a similar occasion for more years than many people can remember—the Duke of Cambridge. The procession was led by Lieut.-Col. J. S. Cowans, A.Q.M.G. First came the personal staff of the Commander-in-Chief, his Aides-de-Camp—Col. Sir S. M. Lockhart, Major the Hon. W. Coke, and Major the Hon. T. F. Freemantle. Then the Equerries to the Prince of Wales—Major-Gen. Sir Stanley Clarke and Capt. Holford, and a khaki-clad officer of Canadian Artillery, Col. Denison. The Headquarters Staff followed.

The Prince of Wales was received with a Royal salute, and then came the inspection of the line, followed by the ceremony of the Troop, which was carried out with faultless precision, and with all the old-fashioned stateliness, in slow time. The colour that was "Trooped" was that of the 1st Batn. Grenadier Guards, which was wreathed with laurels in recognition of the fact that on May 23, 1706, the Grenadier Guards shared in the victory of Ramillies under the Duke of Marlborough. The music played during the ceremony was rendered by the massed bands of the Foot Guards, under the direction of Mr. J. M. Rogan, of the Coldstream Guards, the senior bandmaster of the brigade. At the conclusion of the ceremony the Prince and the staffs returned to Marlborough House. A feature of the ceremony this year was the appearance on parade of a company of the Royal Guards Reserve Batn. This company was played past the saluting base, first by the air "Auld Lang Syne," and then the "Boys of the Old Brigade." Their marching and appearance were alike admirable, and the men were received with a hearty cheer. It would have been excusable had the performance of the troops this year fallen short of that of previous years. But it did not. The whole proceedings were admirably arranged and beautifully executed. The Guards, in fact, may be said to have excelled themselves; all ranks evidently having determined to do their best, knowing that the splendid gallantry of the battalions in the field imposed upon them the duty of upholding their credit at home.

HEALTH IN THE BATTLEFIELD IS KEPT AND RESTORED BY HOFF'S FLUID MALT EXTRACT.—Dr. ROBICEK, Imp. General Major, Physician of the AUSTRIAN Army, writes:—JOHANN HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT has been of great service to us in convalescence from intermittent fever, when our soldiers suffered from that malady and from wakefulness. The RUSSIAN Military Hospital reports:—We had very many cases of Amputation, in all of which the Tonic and refreshing qualities of HOFF'S MALT proved very serviceable. Signed, Dr. BABING, Physician. Send this MALT to your Friends in the field, who will appreciate it. M. HOFF, HAMBURG, must be on all labels. London House: 20, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

The Royal Military Tournament at Islington is now in excellent working order, and the public are crowding the hall at each performance. The several items of the programme are thoroughly appreciated, and there is every prospect of a good financial result, judging by the popularity of the several displays. At first it was almost feared that the absence of so many of the permanent committee on active service would militate against the popularity of the Tournament. This, however, is happily not the case, for most efficient substitutes have been found, and all who have gone to Islington have come away delighted, everything being managed with the utmost precision, whilst the courtesy of the officials is a subject of general approval.

The Princess of Wales opened the National Bazaar in aid of the War Funds, at the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, on Thursday. The Bazaar is the biggest thing of its kind ever held in London, and every regiment and branch of the Services is represented, the several stalls being presided over by ladies connected with the Services or counties concerned. The takings on the first day amounted to £15,000, all of which will be appropriated to the respective funds. The catalogue or souvenir is quite a gem in its way, and contains portraits of the principal ladies connected with the organising and regimental stall committees. The sale for this has been enormous. It is produced in Messrs. Gale and Polden's best style. Our readers do not wish to be reminded how excellent the work of this eminent firm always is.

Major-General H. J. Hallows, commanding the troops at Jamaica, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year. General Hallows joined the Army May 11, 1855, and served in the Afghan War 1879-80 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp).

At the Scholarships Examination at Tonbridge School in June next, the house masters will offer two house scholarships, preferentially to sons of officers in the Army or Navy who have fallen or become incapacitated in the war in South Africa.

Obituary.

ARMY.

Gen. Lord Mark Kerr, G.C.B., Colonel of the Somersetshire Light Infantry, died at 12, Buckingham Gate, S.W., on the 17th inst., aged 83. A son of the sixth Marquis of Lothian by his second wife, Harriet, daughter of the third Duke of Buccleuch, Lord Mark was born in 1817, entered the Army as Ensign in the 96th Regiment June 19, 1835. Having obtained his Lieutenantcy Sept. 14, 1838, he exchanged on Dec. 23, 1838, to the 20th Regiment; becoming Captain June 26, 1840; Major July 25, 1851; was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in the Ceylon Rifles by purchase Dec. 30, 1853; was placed on half-pay Jan. 5, 1854; was promoted Colonel Nov. 23, 1854, and, having exchanged to the 13th Light Infantry Dec. 22, 1854, commanded the 1st Batn. until Dec. 19, 1865; becoming Major-General March 6, 1868; Lieutenant-General July 13, 1876; General Nov. 11, 1878; and Colonel 13th Light Infantry Feb. 22, 1880. He commanded the 13th Light Infantry in the Crimea from June 30, 1855, and was at the battle of Tchernaya, siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp, Turkish medal, and 5th Class of the Medjidie). He also served in the Indian Mutiny in command of the 1st Batn. 13th Light Infantry. On April 6, 1858, with a field force composed of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, he effected the relief of Azimghur. For this service he was thanked by the Governor-General for "the gallantry and skilful management which met and broke through a very formidable opposition." He afterwards commanded his battalion in the escort of a large convoy of stores and ammunition into the garrison of Azimghur on April 9 and the subsequent pursuit of Koer Sing's army. At the attack on and retreat from the Fort of Jugdespore Lord Mark, who was in command, was wounded, but he recovered in time to share with his battalion in the Trans-Gogra campaign, including the action at Toolsepoore and the pursuit of the rebels (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, and O.B.). He afterwards acted as Brigadier-General at Delhi, and from 1874 to 1877 commanded the Poona Division of the Bombay Army, but he saw no further active service. He became a K.C.B. May 24, 1881, and a G.C.B. June 3, 1893. The funeral took place on Tuesday at Jedburgh Abbey. Concurrently with the funeral a memorial service was held at St. Andrew's Church, Well Street, which was largely attended.

Gen. Charles Curtis Drury, I.S.C., died at Kenilworth, St. Mary Church, on the 16th inst., aged 76. He was the youngest son of the Rev. H. J. T. Drury, M.A. Joining the Army April 14, 1840, he became Lieutenant July 16, 1842; Captain April 14, 1855; Major Feb. 18, 1861; Lieutenant-Colonel April 14, 1866; Colonel April 14, 1871; Major-General July 1, 1881; Lieutenant-General Jan. 14, 1887; General March 1, 1891. He had seen no war service.

Major-Gen. Joseph Fletcher Richardson, C.B., retired list, I.S.C., died at Barton House, Norwood, on the 17th inst. Born in 1822, he entered the Service in 1841, and was appointed to the 49th Bengal Infantry. With this regiment he was present at the siege of Mooltan in 1848, and in the night attack of Sept. 19, which the eminent historian Malleon describes as "illustrated by the splendid valour of Lieut. Richardson," was carried from the combat after receiving 17 wounds. The Commander-in-Chief of that day, Lord Gough, expressed his appreciation of the young officer's conduct by the following autograph letter:—"My [Dear Mr. Richardson,—Your heroic conduct at the late attack upon the enemy's position before Mooltan is the universal theme of praise, and I cannot deny myself the gratification of assuring you, under my own hand, how highly I admire your conduct, and how anxious I am to prove this by requesting you to let me know how I can best serve you, or what appointment would best suit you. I rejoice to hear your wounds are doing so well. Believe me, always very sincerely yours, GOUGH." Blessed with a splendid constitution, Lieut. Richardson soon got over his wounds, and in 1849 obtained the wish of his heart, the Adjutancy of the 10th Irregular Cavalry, and from that time to the end of his service in 1876 he won and maintained his place among the most dashing cavalry officers of the Indian Army. He served in the second Burmese war, 1854-56, and in the Indian Mutiny raised the Bengal Yeomanry Cavalry, which did such excellent work in Oudh. Major Richardson was repeatedly mentioned in despatches, and notably on one occasion as leading a troop of his regiment when 60 rebels were killed, a 6-pounder gun captured, and, to quote the despatch, "the gallant leader, Major Richardson, in the charge himself killed six of the enemy." These services won for Major Richardson his Majority, the O.B., and a highly complimentary autograph letter from the Viceroy, Lord Canning. His last appointment was the command of the 6th Bengal Cavalry, which he held for some 20 years. His commission bears date: Lieutenant, Jan. 24, 1845; Captain, Jan. 22, 1851; Major, July 20, 1858; Lieutenant-Colonel, May 27, 1866; Colonel, May 27, 1871; and Hon. Major-General on retirement, Nov. 11, 1876.
